1984. Wind passes gently over desert sands, the sound of serenity and mystery. At my feet tiny stunted plants sway quietly in the joy of surrender to the hardships of their existence. In the stillness of this Saharan majesty I sit contemplating a faraway goatherd with his flock. Quranic image. Timeless beauty. Perfect miniature. Pure simplicity. Yearning to merge into, become one with the eternal moment, my eyes fill with salty tears. Silence overwhelms. A limitless sky of luminous sapphire descends and enters my heart. The rapture.

1999. Squeezed in between the musicians. I cannot move. My knees are jammed tightly against my chest. My entire body pulsates in rhythm with the beats of the dholak. I am surrounded by thousands of devotees exalting in appreciation, dancing in ecstasy, sitting reverently or silently weeping as the Sabri Brothers sing each couplet of Sufi poetry. For a few precious moments we all seem to fuse and blend into the joyous unity of the celebration. In front of us the doors of the Shrine of Khwaja Mu'inuddin Chishti glisten with reflected lights. I am carried on a great wave of devotional love.

Expressions of yearning. Aspects of love. Faces of Tasawwuf.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Firstly I wish to express by profound respect of and gratitude to the Sabri Brothers without whom this book would never have been written.

Thanks to my spiritual brother Shah Irshad Soofie of the Hazrat Soofie Saheb Khanqah, Pietermaritzburg, South Africa; to Pir Iqbal Nizami, the Sajjada Nashin of Hazrat Nizamuddin Awliya Dargah, Delhi and to Begum Salma Ahmed of Karachi; to Omid Safi of New York; to Dr. M.I. Hussain Aleem of Kentucky, USA; to Asif Lahori and his family of Lenasia, South Africa; to Hasan Akhtar and Muhammad Harun Riedinger of Karachi; and to Zamzam Bibi Chishti, my spiritual sister of Ajmer Sharif.

Thanks to Mr Khawar Butt, Mr Ahmed Kuli Khan and an anonymous Karachi lady for their generous support. Thanks also to Naseem Nasir, Ahmed Shah, Taheera Kaleemi and her family, Shahzadi Inayat, Atiya Khan, Firdaus Hyder, Tahir Masood, Mr Firozuddin Ahmed, Shakil Paracha and numerous unnamed yet remembered ones.

And my thanks to Coleman Barks for his Versions of Rumi (*), W.C.Chittick and P.L. Wilson for their translations of Fakhruddin 'Iraqi (), and Andrew Harvey for his Rumi translation ()).

INTRODUCTION

Ours is a strange world. Much has been said about the era of neoliberal capitalism, the rampant spread of globalization which perpetuates secularization, rape of the environment, oppression of workers who live far below the poverty line, the “North/South” division, destruction of traditional cultures, etc. All of these are true, and many activists, Muslim or not, are fighting to resist this overpowering system and come up with fair and just alternatives. Ironically, the same process of globalization also means that more people today all around the world have come to conceive of themselves as inhabitants of one planet, drawing upon one reservoir of natural resources. This is also true in more subtle realms, like spirituality and music. Musically we see examples where Sting jams with Algerian rai musicians, where Peter Gabriel has been responsible for introducing much of Sufi music to the West. The transmission of culture and spiritual insights do not flow in a unilateral direction today, but truly whirl around the world like a dervish, connecting the East and the West, North and the South.

My own introduction to the Sufi context of the Sabri Brothers, who figure so prominently in this book, is ironically indebted to that same process of globalization, with all of its cruel ugliness and surprising (and no doubt unintended) beauties. Some years ago, when I living in North Carolina, I lived with two kindred souls, both spiritually advanced Sufis who were deeply immersed in the South Asian aesthetic of Islam. It was my first introduction to Qawwali, and a revelation indeed from the realm of the spirit after my previous experiences largely with Persian and Turkish Sufi music. An American convert to Islam, a dear Sufi friend named Mahmud, had years before played the Sabri Brothers meditation on the Prophet Muhammad, titled “Habib” (Beloved). It was an enchanting song, culminating in:

ya sahib al-jamal wa ya zinat al-bashar...
O possessor of beauty
O adornment of creation

After that, I sought some more Qawwali music, and immersed myself in Nusrat Fateh Ali Khan and others. But my heart kept seeking the Sabris. Some years later, I found the third volume of the “Greatest Hits” of Sabri Brothers, and in it I came across a magical poem:

Ya Muhammad Nur-e Mojassam:
O Muhammad, embodied light.

Tasvir-e kamal-e muhabbat
Tanvir-e jamal-e khoda-yi
You,
Image of love’s perfection
You,
illumination of God’s beauty.

Afaq-ha gardidam
mehr-e botan varzidam
besyar khooban didam
laken to chiz-e digari

I searched from horizon to horizon
I sought the love of all the idol-beloveds
I saw many beautiful ones
But you, Muhammad... you are something else!

This was the Prophet Muhammad (S) that I know, the Muhammad of devotional life, reflected in a song: the Prophet who was the rahmat al-'alamin (Mercy to all universes), the one for whom God created the Heavens and the Earth (la lawka...). Here was a powerful demonstration of how the popular tradition of veneration for the Prophet (so beautifully documented in Annemarie Schimmel's And Muhammad Is His Messenger) was still being transmitted today through the Sufi music of Sabri Brothers and others.

Like the classical lovers who fall love with one glance, and yearn for more, I too kept seeking more music that spoke to the heart like this. Something that was rooted in the beautiful Sufi tradition, and reminded one of our Eternal Home and Destination. One day when I was in a music store in North Carolina, I saw the new CD by Sabri Brothers, called Ya Mustapha. I remember putting the headphones on, and hearing:

*hasbi rabbi jal Allah ma fi qalbi ghayr Allah
Nur Muhammad salla Allah Haqq! La ilaha illa Allah*

My sustaining lord suffices me
Glory be to God!
There is no room in my heart
except for God!
Blessed be the Light of Muhammad...
Truth! There is no deity except God!

The refrain is a familiar Arabic one that I had heard in many Sufi gatherings from India to Turkey and Egypt, unto North America. Yet here was the chorus of a song, being recited with passion and beauty by the Sabri Brothers. Each time that it was sung, it resonated more and more in my heart, and I felt the rust of forgetfulness being knocked down. And there, in the midst of a music store, there were tears streaming down my face (to the slight amusement of the quite hip patrons of the store!). I remember grabbing the CD, paying for it quickly, and rushing home where I could listen to its healing words over and over again.

The Qawwali tradition of South Asia is a magnificent spiritual treasure for all Muslims. It beautifully brings together the Indo-Persian Sufi tradition, the courtly refinement of Indian music, and the poetry tradition of Persian, Urdu, Urdu, Punjabi, and local vernaculars. With the exception of the Mevlevi (Mawlawiyya) order in Turkey and beyond, no other Sufi tariqa (spiritual order) has made such extensive use of music than the Chishtis of South Asia. The music of the Sabri Brothers, which figures so prominently in this wonderful memoir by Amatullah Armstrong, unfolds from the very heart of that Chishti tradition.

Jurists and Sufis have carried on a thousand year old debate about the propriety of music in an Islamic context. Some jurists have declared all of it haram (forbidden), others have adopted a more careful approach that bases the verdict on the heart of the one who hears the music. This is indeed the opinion of the famed theologian al-Ghazali (d. 1111) who concludes that music brings out in the heart of one whose heart has been purified yearning for God, and in the heart of one who is ruled by nafs (ego-self, carnal self) merely more ego and more passions. It is for that reason that historically speaking Sufis have always insisted that music as sublime as this should be played in the khanaqah (Sufi lodge) or dargah (Sufi shrine), where one could also receive instruction from a Sufi master to purify one's heart.

The music of Sabri Brothers can be a powerful spiritual tool for the aspirants on the Sufi path. There is no one magical key for unlocking the treasures of the heart that are hidden in every soul, but a music that reminds one of the Divine, one that evokes a sense of ecstasy (wajd) rooted not in passions of the carnal self but the joyous ecstasy of union with the Eternal Beloved is a powerful tool. May each reader who is a seeker (talib) be fortunate enough to find a Sufi community in which she or he can find authentic and transformative instructions on the path back to the Divine.

wa ilayhi raji'un,
and we are perpetually returning to God...

PREFACE

“This is the lady who is going to write the book about me.”

I never met the great Pakistani qawwal, Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri, in this world. Yet he came to me in many dreams and in one dream he told me to write a book. It happened like this.

It was a cool August morning in 1997. I had just offered the dawn prayer in our tenth floor apartment. The northern Australian city of Brisbane was still and tranquil at that mystical hour of the day, when receptive hearts are opened in readiness to receive whatever may be sent from the Realm of Imagination. I fell asleep and saw a dream.

I am standing in an empty space. I can hear the voice of Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri but I cannot see him. I can only hear his deep voice. I can see Nusrat Fateh Ali Khan’s face. Haji Saheb says to Nusrat, “This is the lady who is going to write the book about me”. Very slowly and with great consideration Nusrat scrutinizes my face. He looks straight into my eyes and then, with a gentle smile, nods his head in approval, indicating that I am the one who must write this book.

Emerging from the mists of my dream I awoke and entered the day. Within only an hour or two I received a phone call from a friend. He told me the sad news that Nusrat Fateh Ali Khan, another famous Pakistani qawwal, had passed away in London only a few hours earlier. The veils were removed from my dream. Now it stood out in sharp clarity, revealing its message. Not only was the dream informing me of the book that had been assigned to me, it was also bringing direct news of Nusrat’s death, immediately after it had happened. At the time of seeing the dream Nusrat Fateh Ali Khan had just joined Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri in the spiritual realm. The two great divinely inspired qawwals were together and I was the lady to whom a book had been given!

This is not a biography of Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri and his brothers. It has never been my intention to write their life story. And this is not a book about music either. So vast is the ocean of classical Indian music, I dare not venture past its shoreline. This is simply a story about being with the Sabri Brothers and being engulfed by their music. It is about the unfolding of a dream and the journey that took me from the midst of an Australian bushland paradise to the rapture of devotion at the Shrines of the Great Chishti Saints in Pakistan and India.

“The Lamp of Love” is one story amongst many such stories of yearning and searching for the Beloved. Every person has a story and every person is a story. This is just one story amongst millions.

FOREWORD

Music and Sufism (Tasawwuf)

Islam has an outer dimension and an inner dimension. Its exoteric or outer dimension, which is the domain of the Sacred Law (Shari'at) of the Qur'anic Revelation, is concerned with the attainment of salvation, that is, with the securing for all men a blessed return to Allāh. Its esoteric or inner dimension is Tasawwuf, known in the West as Sufism. This is the domain of the Spiritual Path (Tariqa) of the Qur'anic Revelation and is wholly concerned with the attainment of human perfection and therefore sanctity, in this life. Tasawwuf could be likened to the heart within the body of Islam.

William Stoddart writes, "Mysticism makes its appearance, as an inward dimension, in every religion, and to attempt to separate the mystical element from the religion which is its outward support is an arbitrary act of violence which cannot but be fatal to the mysticism, or spiritual path, concerned."

Whilst William C. Chittick states, "Sufism is simply full and complete actualization of the faith and practice of Islam. The verified Sufi is the perfect Muslim. To become a Sufi in the true sense is to become a muwahhid, one who establishes tawhid or asserts the unity of God [Allāh], not simply with the tongue, but also with the understanding and the whole being. By this definition, Islam without Sufism is an aberration from the Koranic [Qu'ranic] norm."

"Sufi ideology is a response to orthodox Islam, at the same time emanating from its very tenets," says Regula Burckhardt Qureshi. "Thus while affirming the unity of God (tawhid) and the absolute distinction between Creator and created, Sufism also assumes an inner kinship between God and man and strives to bridge the gulf between them through the dynamic force of love (muhabbat)."

The Holy Qur'an refers to the Holy Prophet Muhammad as "the beautiful model". "Verily, in the Messenger of Allah is a beautiful model for those of you that set their hopes on Allah and the Last Day, and remember Allah much" (The Holy Qur'an 33:2). All Muslims are urged to model themselves and their lives upon his perfect example. The people of the Sufi Path, that is, those who "remember Allāh much", strive to take this Qur'anic injunction to its utmost limit by endeavouring to adhere to the "beautiful model" in all aspects of their inner and outer lives.

Following the Holy Prophet's perfect example the Sufi Masters practise various spiritual methods to purify the heart in readiness for the inner encounter with the Divinity. The principle method used within all of the Sufi Tariqas is the Invocation or Remembrance of Allāh, zikrullah. The invocation and glorification of Allāh takes place through the repetition of one of His Names, or a phrase to His Glory. In a Sacred Saying (Hadith Qudsi) Allāh says, on the tongue of the Holy Prophet Muhammad, "I am sitting with the one who remembers Me." The entire art of Tasawwuf is perfecting the zikr so that it becomes perpetual, filling the heart with the uninterrupted music of the zikr and thereby placing one, constantly, in the Divine Presence.

The Invocation or Remembrance of Allāh, zikr, can be undertaken by the initiate either in isolation or under the immediate direction of the Master within a gathering or assembly of other initiates. Specific breathing patterns are central to the effectiveness of the zikr and often within the collective zikr the practice is intensified and heightened by the accompaniment of rhythmic drumbeats. As the drumbeats change so too does the breathing pattern, and the breath of the invoker then directly affects his heartbeat. The drumbeats become like the outward reverberations of the heartbeats of those who invoke or remember Allāh at the gathering.

Another spiritual method used within Tasawwuf is the audition of music (sama'). Although the lawfulness of music has been the subject of long controversy within Islam, the people of the Sufi Path use it as a means of opening the heart to spiritual realities.

William C. Chittick says, "In some parts of the Islamic world it [music] has remained slightly peripheral because of the understanding of some of the ulama [scholars] that music was prohibited by the Prophet. However, there is no agreement on this prohibition. What the ulama all agree upon is that music has an extremely potent effect upon the soul, and that it can represent both the beautiful (that which reflects the divine beauty) and the dispersive and fiery (the satanic), not to mention every other human possibility."

"While zikr is sanctioned by the Koran (Sura 33:40 and 13:28), sama' has always remained a theologically controversial practice, because the mainstream of Islamic theological opinion has prohibited music as dangerous and unlawful, although no direct prohibition of music is contained in the Koran" writes Regula Burckhardt Qureshi.

Imam al-Ghazali says, "The heart of man has been so constituted by the Almighty that, like a flint, it contains a hidden fire which is evoked by music and harmony, and renders man beside himself with ecstasy. These harmonies are echoes of that higher world of beauty which we call the world of spirits; they remind man of his relationship to that world, and produce in him an emotion so deep and strange that he himself is powerless to explain it. The effect of music and dancing is deeper in proportion to the natures on which they act are simple and prone to emotion; they fan into a flame whatever love is already dormant in the heart, whether it be earthly and sensual, or divine and spiritual."

He continues, "At present we content ourselves with saying that music and dancing do not put into the heart what is not there already, but only fan into a flame dormant emotions. Therefore if a man has in his heart that love to [Allāh] which the law enjoins, it is perfectly lawful, nay laudable in him to take part in exercises which promote it. On the other hand, if his heart is full of sensual desires, music and dancing will only increase them, and are therefore unlawful to him. While, if he listens to them merely as a matter of amusement, they are neither lawful nor unlawful, but indifferent. For the mere fact that they are pleasant does not make them unlawful any more than the pleasure of listening to the singing of birds or looking at green grass and running water is unlawful."

Like all the spiritual methods of self-purification of Tasawwuf, sama' is a means to an end. It is not the end in itself. The aim of sama' is spiritual ecstasy which opens the heart to inrushes of knowledge (or recognition) of the Divinity (ma'rifat). Not every listener at the sama' assembly is destined to attain to ecstasy. It is all a matter of Divine Grace. Shaykh Ibn al-'Arabi defines "ecstasy" (wajd) as "the states (ahwal) that come upon the heart unexpectedly and annihilate it from witnessing itself and those present." When such a true ecstasy is experienced the listener may find Allāh within that ecstasy.

To quote Imam al-Ghazali again: "We now come to the purely religious use of music and dancing: such is that of the Sufis, who by this means stir up in themselves greater love towards [Allāh], and, by means of music, often obtain spiritual visions and ecstasies, their heart becoming in this condition as clean as silver in the flame of the furnace, and attaining a degree of purity which could never be attained by any amount of mere outward austerities. The Sufi then becomes so keenly aware of his relationship to the spiritual world that he loses consciousness of this world, and often falls down senseless."

And Shaykh Sharafuddin Maneri says in his Hundred Letters, "Hence it should be known that whoever is overcome in face of love of the Lord, and who yearns to see Him, finds that listening to music is a stimulant that excites his holy desire and serves to further strengthen his love and ardent yearning by bringing it out into the open. Listening brings forth the fire in his breast from its hiding place, and makes it visible in favored states, by means of clear manifestation and mutual enlightenment. This could not have taken place within the blockaded heart itself. Know that if anyone is destined to experience this grace, and to have these blessings showered upon him, these exalted states, in the language of the Sufis, are referred to as 'ecstatic outpourings'. At this stage, listening to music is lawful - even desirable! Some even say that it is necessary that this step should be taken, for although something may be playful in this world, yet when it reaches the stage of hearing the Lord Himself, it becomes something truly wonderful. How greatly a person is transformed in his essence! Whatever then comes to him will also be transformed."

Hazrat Nizamuddin Awliya said, "The great spiritual Masters have attended musical assemblies and they are supporters of this activity. For that person who has a taste for Allāh and has experienced the pain of separation from Him, hearing one line of poetry can create in him an overwhelming sense of pathos, whether or not musical instruments are used. But as for the person who has never experienced the taste for Allāh, even if countless reciters appear before him and play every kind of musical instrument, what use will they be since he is not among the people of pain, that is, he is not among those who experience the pain of separation from Allāh? Hence one should note that this activity is connected with pain not with musical instruments or anything else!"

And the final word on the permissibility of sama' is related by Shaykh Sharafuddin Maneri. The Shaykh relates how the Archangel Gabriel came to the Holy Prophet bringing the good news that, "The dervishes of your community will enter paradise five hundred years before the rich.” The Holy Prophet was filled with joy and said, “Is there anyone present who can recite a poem for the occasion?” A man said, “Yes, I can, O Messenger of Allāh!” He replied, “Then recite!”

*The serpent of love has stung my heart:
There is no physician, and none to administer a charm,
Except that Beloved with whom I am enthralled.
With Him are the charm and the antidote as well!*

On hearing this poem the Holy Prophet and his Companions stood up in a state of rapture. So enraptured was the Holy Prophet that his cloak fell from his shoulders. After the ecstasy had subsided he said, ‘No one who fails to rejoice when he hears the song of the Friend can possibly be favoured!’ The cloak of the Holy Prophet was cut into four hundred pieces and distributed amongst all those present.

Qawwali* and the Sabri Brothers

Wherever there are Muslims there are Sufi Tariqas and wherever there are Sufi Tariqas there is Sufi music. Qawwali is the devotional music of the Sufi Tariqas of Pakistan and India. The term Qawwali derives from the Arabic word qaul, meaning speech or utterance, and is applied to a specific form of Sufi music and also to the occasion of its performance. The qawwal is the singer. It is the human voice, the utterance or speech of the qawwal himself, in combination with the rhythms of the music, which give Qawwali its extraordinary power; a power which can take a receptive listener to the heights of spiritual ecstasy and transform him into one who hears and finds Allāh.

The Qawwali gathering is an intense form of devotion and worship during which songs of Divine Love addressed to the Beloved are sung in Praise of Allah, the Holy Prophet Muhammad and the Great Sufi Saints. The qawwals use the vast treasury of mystical poetry of the Sufi Masters as a vehicle to transport their audience across the bridge from the finite realm to the Infinite realm. This poetry abounds in beautiful and often sensuous imagery of the cup (paimana), wine (sharab), tavern (maikhana), cup-bearer (Saqi), the candle (shama), the moth (parwana), the rose (gul) and the nightingale (bulbul), intoxication, sobriety, lover and Beloved, yearning for mystical union, the pain of separation. But this imagery is often misunderstood and misinterpreted by those unfamiliar with the Sufi Teaching. For the people of Tasawwuf the sensuous always indicates the spiritual. The Holy Prophet Muhammad said, "When you see beautiful women remember the houris of the Paradise; and refer yourself from this world to the next, and from the next world refer yourself to Allāh, Who is Absolute Beauty."

The Beloved about whom the qawwal sings is always Allāh or the Holy Prophet Muhammad or one of the Great Saints or the Pir-O -Murshid. The lover is always the devotee on the Sufi Path, the one who yearns for Allāh. Intoxication is annihilation of self in Allāh. Sobriety is returning to oneself after being absent from oneself in Allāh. Wine is the drink of Divine Love. The tavern is the heart of the Saint or Murshid. This imagery is rich and endless.

The voices of the qawwals singing their messages of Praise and Divine Love, and the rhythms of the music, which is performed on harmonium, dholak and tabla, with the accompaniment of hand clapping, are similar to the ceaseless recitation of Divine Names in the Sufi practice of zikr. Repetition of short rhythmic phrases of music and lyrics can bring about, in receptive listeners, various spiritual states, ranging from those of the most profound sadness to those of the highest joy and ultimately to the loss of self in the ecstasy of annihilation in the Divinity. Qawwali is an art of communication. It is an art of the 'moment', an art of spontaneity, in which the qawwals and their musicians must respond, immediately, to the spiritual needs of the audience. The qawwals respond to their audience who in turn respond to the qawwals, back and forth, an art of communication. Just as zikr is a means to reach the goal, so too is qawwali. Qawwali is not an end in itself. The sublime voices, the mystical poetry and the powerful music are vehicles to carry the "one who hears" across the bridge to the Infinite Realm of Wonder.

In the sublime words of the greatest lover Mevlana Jalaluddin Rumi:

*"Don't worry about saving these songs!
And if one of our instruments breaks,
it doesn't matter.*

We have fallen into the place where everything is music.

*The strumming and the flute notes rise into the atmosphere, and even if the whole world's harp should burn up, there will still be hidden instruments playing." **

The Sabri Brothers, Pakistan's highly esteemed and best-loved qawwals, are referred to as "Roving Ambassadors for Pakistan". For over thirty years they have been inspiring audiences throughout the world, bringing joy, spiritual solace and comfort to all peoples, regardless of race, religion, class, language and culture. Following the great qawwali tradition, established over 700 years ago by Hazrat Amir Khusrau in Delhi, today it is the Sabri Brothers who are inspiring many people in foreign lands. The Sufi message of Divine Love, which they carry and deliver through their traditional qawwali, is the universal message of generosity, compassion and love of all humanity.

The Sabri Brothers musical lineage stretches back over centuries and passes down through many generations of great musicians to the time of the Moghul Emperors. They are the direct descendants of the legendary Mian Tansen, the great singer at the Court of Akbar.

Originally there were four Sabri Brothers. The eldest brother, Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri passed away in 1994. A man of immense spirituality he is considered by many to be a saint. Haji Kamal Sabri, the second eldest brother and a master of the technique Tan Tarana, passed away very recently in 2001.

Since their beginning the Sabri Brothers have been led by Haji Maqbool Ahmed Sabri who was born in Kalyana India in 1945. Founder and Musical Director of the Sabri Brothers, he is an artist of rare genius, having devoted his entire life to music since the tender age of 5. Music is in his blood. But his genius goes far deeper than that. His divinely inspired art is a gift from Allāh. Maestro par excellence of classical qawwali, Haji Maqbool Ahmed Sabri still leads the group.

The youngest brother, Mehmood Ghaznavi Sabri, was born in Karachi in 1949. An inspired qawwal and true dervish, he is now second qawwal. Together Haji Maqbool and Mehmood Ghaznavi continue to thrill their audiences both at home in Pakistan and India, and abroad from northern Europe to South Africa, from Morocco to Australia.

Winners of numerous Awards and tireless workers for charity, for the poor and oppressed, and for the victims of earthly calamities, the Sabri Brothers are true servants of Allāh. Not only do they serve Allāh, they also serve His humanity. The Sabri Brothers are artists and servants. They are lovers of the Sufis Saints.

The Sabri Brothers' stunning virtuosity and brilliant exposition brings audiences to the heights of amazement and awe, whilst the tremendous power, subtlety, sensitivity and beauty of their voices reaches to the depths of the human heart, speaking in a divine language beyond words. But these techniques of qawwali remain nothing but empty virtuosity if the qawwals themselves are without faith and unable to give what they are singing about: love. The Sabri Brothers sing from their direct experience of Divine Love. And it is for this reason that they take so many of their listeners to the Divine Presence.

THE STORY

1. “In pre-Eternity there were hosts of souls.”

The Sufi Tradition holds that before the creation, in pre-Eternity there were hosts of souls who knew and loved each other. When these souls descended into the phenomenal realm they felt an attraction and affection and love for each other. These spiritual birds of a feather flocked together. And, in Eternity they will also be together because the Holy Prophet Muhammad has said that when we die we will be with the ones we love.

My attraction and connection to the Sufi Saints of the Indo-Pak Subcontinent, and to their lovers, reaches back to pre-Eternity. However the story of this attraction and the awareness of the spiritual connection began in July 1991, six years before seeing the above-mentioned dream about Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri and Nusrat Fateh Ali Khan.

In July 1991 I saw another dream of astounding significance, a dream that was to change the entire direction of my life. To briefly describe that dream:

An irresistible force is attracting me. In a trancelike state I am searching for one particular man. I feel myself being pulled forward by the power of an unseen unknown man. After much searching I reach a door and enter discreetly. The man I am seeking is seated amongst a group of men. The setting is strange with many dervishes gathered. I sit silently and in awe of the man in the center. He slowly turns and smiles at me. I don't recognize his face but my heart knows him. I know that I “know” him. Quietly he says to one of the dervishes, “She belongs to us. I know from her vibrations she should be with us.” He says that spoken words are not necessary because he and I are communicating on a very high level. Then he slowly starts reciting the names of the Saints (shijra) of a Sufi Order (Silsila). I do not understand which Sufi Silsila it is though! He sways from side to side, rhythmically, in time with the recitation of the names. Some of the dervishes go into ecstasy.

I wrote down the details of this dream as I always did, filed them away in my notes and in the deep recesses of my memory. Then I forgot all about the dream for three years. Strangely, I never again thought about the man in the dream for whom I had so desperately searched and eventually found, the man who had said, “She belongs to us.”

I was living in the solitude of one hundred acres of Australian bush land. A videocassette had been sent through the mail. Written on the packet was “Sabri Brothers: Sufi Music from Pakistan.” What is this I thought? It was a cool April evening in 1994. Outside the windows, grazing in the twilight, were the usual visiting wallabies, ears twitching, eyes on the alert. I turned on the video. Without any forewarning and within a few moments the entire direction of my life drastically altered. Though I did not know it! I was totally unaware of the immense repercussions that were to be created by that memorable video.

This was my initial encounter with Pakistan's best-loved Sufi qawwals, the Sabri Brothers. I had never before heard of qawwali or the Sabri Brothers. In a state of absorbed attention I watched and listened to the qawwals performing at the Shrine of 'Abdullah Shah Ghazi in Karachi. They were singing one of Hazrat Amir Khusrau's songs of love, addressed to his beloved Pir-O-Murshid, Hazrat Nizamuddin Awliya. The words, the powerful music and the images hit my heart with incredible force.

"You have given me the nectar of love to drink and you made me drunk the moment my eyes met yours!"

I was spellbound. But I was also perplexed. Somehow there was something so very familiar about it. Something stirred within me as I watched. What was it? "I know this place! Surely I know this place!" But I had never been to Karachi, so how could I know it? Yet, I recognized the place. And that man, surely I have seen him before! "I am certain I know this leading qawwal with the long hair! How is this possible?"

Slowly, out of those deep recesses of memory came the water-coloured images of the dream I had seen three years earlier. The place. The occasion. The gathering. And the man! Yes! I had been there before. I had met this man. In my dream! This gathering of Pakistani dervishes and faqirs at the Shrine of 'Abdullah Shah Ghazi was the same gathering of my dream. And this was the man I had sat behind, in a state of reverent awe, listening as he recited the names of the Saints of a Sufi Silsila. In the dream he had turned and smiled at me and he had said, "She belongs to us!"

But stranger still! The music and the man's voice stirred something so deep within my being, touching something deeper than anything I had yet experienced in my life. The music wasn't simply emerging from the deep recesses of my memory of some long forgotten melodies or notes. It was as though I had always known this music. Always. Long before I was. It took me back. Further and further and further. Even past the past. Way beyond, awakening and reminding me...of what? I was puzzled. Bewildered by this ancient race memory, the very memory of humanity itself. "I have heard this music before!" "How could you? This is the first time you've heard it!" "No! I heard this music in pre-Eternity! I know I did!"

Could this be the memory of the "day" that the Sufis call the Day of Alast? The day in pre-Eternity when Almighty Allāh spoke to each and every soul that would ever come into existence, asking each and every one of us the decisive question, "Am I not thy Lord?" (Alastu birabbikum?) The day when each and every one of us bore witness to Allāh's Lordship over us by answering in the affirmative, "Yea! We do testify!" (Bala shahidna!)

"In pre-Eternity there were hosts of souls."

2. “A major landmark has been reached.”

During the next few days I watched the video many times. I was high on the qawwali experience of sama’ and just wanted more. I kept returning again and again to the music and to the qawwal. The effect was immediate. I felt that a major landmark had been reached on the spiritual journey, a landmark or point where perceptions are altered, different to before. I didn’t know what had affected me to such an extent. Was it the music? Or was it the man himself?

In my diary I wrote highly emotive and passionate words, springing directly from my spiritual state. In Tasawwuf this condition is called lisan al-hal, the tongue of the state. Things that should be contained and held within and thoughts about which one should remain silent gush forth in a great overflow. I had fallen off the boat into the Ocean of ‘ishq.

“Love lit a fire in my chest, and anything that wasn’t love left: intellectual subtlety, philosophy books, school.

All I want now to do or hear is poetry.”

It is essential to briefly explain how I reached the state of preparedness and receptivity for this overwhelming experience of Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri and his qawwali. It didn’t just happen “out of the blue” so to speak, even though for me it came unexpectedly and without warning. For several years the ascetic practices of Tasawwuf had been preparing me for the intense spiritual moment of the sama’, the moment when the placeless place is “reached” and the timeless time is experienced - utterly.

Music, particularly Western classical music, had played an important role in my life for many years prior to becoming a Muslim. I then became aware that the position of music in Islam was a point of controversy and contention between exoteric and esoteric Muslims. Whilst adhering to the esoteric viewpoint that music is permissible, and listening to it is often an act of worship and a means to attain to the higher spiritual realities, I nonetheless stopped listening to it for a very extended period of time. As an act of self-discipline in my personal jihad against the nafs al-ammara, the lower self, I totally denied myself this pleasure and turned instead to the practice of zkrullah, the Remembrance of Allāh. I hated denying myself music. It was extremely difficult to hold to such a firm resolve. But the Holy Prophet Muhammad had said, “The Garden is surrounded by hated things.” So I persevered – for ten years. A long time! I devotedly and sincerely applied myself to the purification of the heart using the Sufi methods of zkr: Allāh tells us in the Holy Qur’an, “Surely in the Remembrance of Allah do hearts find satisfaction.” The Holy Prophet Muhammad said, “Verily, there is a polish for everything and the polish for the heart is the zikrullah.”

Tasawwuf springs from two Sacred Sources: the Holy Qur’an, and the Art and Science of Self-Transformation. The Holy Qur’an is the final Divine Revelation from Allāh to His humanity. The Art and Science of Self-Transformation are comprised of the spiritual doctrine and methods that were taught and practised by the Last Universal Prophet and Messenger Muhammad.

These spiritual practices are aimed at purifying and polishing the heart, in readiness to receive any inrushes of knowledge (or recognition) of the Divinity (ma’rifat) that may or may not be sent. Striving to reach a state of preparedness, or readiness to receive, requires one to engage, totally and utterly, in spiritual struggle (mujahada) and ascetic discipline (riyada) using the celestial weapon of Remembrance of Allāh (zikrullah). This process of discipline and struggle in the spiritual battle is an intense contraction, as all warfare must be! But there are always lulls on the battlefield when the enemy retreats allowing the warrior time to rest and contemplate the imminent victory that he believes to be close at hand. Fleeting moments of ineffable joy and love engulf and expand the heart as it catches tiny wafts of fragrant breezes from the abode of the Beloved. Yet, this expansion soon fades and recedes. The contraction returns and dominates. The battle resumes.

After adhering to these practices with dedication and sincerity, a crucial stage is reached when the bird that is trapped inside the cage must break free and soar towards the heavens. The purified heart has become so sensitive, so shining and so delicate that it is filled to overflowing with the most painful yearning for the Beloved. The spirit within longs to be reunited with the Spirit from which it was severed at the moment of “Kun fayakun!” “Be! And it is!” (Holy Qur’an 35:82). At this point, after an extended period of spiritual contraction, the heart is in a state of readiness to receive the expansion of the sama’, or spiritual audition.

However sama’ does not hold the same place of importance within the various Sufi tariqas. Sama’ and dance (raqs) are integral to the Mevlevi Tariqa, founded by the great Sufi Saint and mystic poet Jalaluddin Rumi. Orders such as the Suhrawardiyya and the Naqshbandiyya prohibit sama’ completely or compromise by permitting the songs without any musical accompaniment. Though music has recently been introduced into the Haqqani-Mevlevi branch of the Naqshbandi Order. Some Sufi Shaykhs say that sama’ is not suitable for the novice, whilst others encourage it. In the Shadhiliyya (Shazliyya) Silsila music is sometimes used as a means to open the heart to higher spiritual realities, after an intensive period of discipline and struggle. One of the spiritual practices of the Shadhiliyya is the hadrah or 'presence', in which bodily movements, induced by the chanting of zikr, are accompanied by the rhythmic beats of drum and tambourine. Within the Chishti Silsila sama’ or qawwali is of vital importance. It is indispensable. Qawwali is “a method of worship” and “a means of spiritual advancement” and “a feast for the soul.”

And so, with a heart trembling and quivering under the tight grip of the spiritual contraction of infinite longing, I turned on a video of Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri and the Sabri Brothers at the Mazar of ‘Abdullah Shah Ghazi ... and then ... the expansion! The bird escaped from its cage. It soared. It reached. It experienced, for a flash, the placeless place and the timeless time of the eternal “now”, the creative moment.

This is the sama’.

True sama’ is a bird which flies from Allāh to Allāh. Allāh is the singer and Allāh is the hearer. At this Divine Feast the singer and the hearer become One.

I had reached a major landmark on the spiritual journey. A landmark of such awe inspiring splendour that all of the territory I had previously traversed, all of the points of majesty and beauty I had encountered, all of the lesser landmarks I had recognized seemed as nothing compared to this one dazzling landmark!

I reflected, questioning myself - was this landmark the man or the music or the experience of sama’? Initially I thought the illuminated and illuminating man was the landmark. This shining light that was guiding and directing me to ... I knew not what!

The immediacy of this impact was overwhelming as happens so often to people of the Sufi Path. It is known that a single glance from a Sufi Master can instantly transform the one upon whom the glance falls. Fakhruddin ‘Iraqi the ecstatic poet of Persia tried to flee from the glance of Shaykh Baha’uddin Zakariyya’ Multani, saying, “Just as a magnet draws iron, so the Shaykh will capture me. We must go at once!” But to no avail, there was no escaping his destiny.

The divine attraction of Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri was unbelievable. This was not a gradually increasing attraction. It was instantaneous. And it was all the more astounding because prior to this encounter I had been very sober, spiritually speaking. Even during my quest for direction before embracing Islam, I remember being drawn to the “level headed” paths. And any outward display of ecstatic spiritual states actually made me feel quite uncomfortable. Yet, here I was, no longer restrained and level headed, but whirling under the divine attraction! I had become Majnun, seeing nothing but Layla. “To see the beauty of Layla you need the eyes of Majnun.”

“Love has taken away my practices and filled me with poetry.

I tried to keep quietly repeating “No strength but Yours”, but I couldn’t.

*I had to clap and sing.
I used to be respectable and chaste and stable,*

but who can stand in this strong wind and remember those things?"

(Mevlana Jalaluddin Rumi)*

I was fanatical during that period of my spiritual journey. In retrospect I realize that such extreme passion was necessary. Without it I would never have found the courage or had the guts to take the drastic steps I was destined to take in the coming years. It was my obsession with this Pakistani qawwal that eventually drew me across the seas to a new life in a new land. This obsession had attached me to a loop on the end of a long thread. And someone was pulling on the other end of that thread, bringing me closer and closer to the land of the great Sufi Saints.

3. A book, a search and a fax.

When I embarked upon my next task, a small dictionary of key Sufi terms, I thought it would be serious yet relatively easy work. I sat at the computer and started going through the alphabetical list of Arabic words, giving brief explanations whilst taking frequent breaks to dive into, again and again, the magic of the Pakistani qawwal's voice. He was continually opening sweet new spiritual experiences for me.

But, the terminology was not destined to be a thin and concise booklet. In the pre-dawn chill of a mid-winter night the book took a radically different direction. I saw a dream. I was blessed beyond understanding with the most yearned-for of all visions: a dream in which I had a vision of the Best of Creation, our Noble and Exalted Prophet Muhammad al-Mustafa. May Allāh Shower him with Blessings and Peace. Only this much can be said. In images of such beauty and tranquility I was given a book to write – a Sufi terminology.

I was overwhelmed. This was an awesome task! A frightening task! Yet, I was pervaded with great joy. But this joy was tinged with fear – the fear of failure, failure to fulfill the task, failure to live up to the responsibility. But, errors, faults and shortcomings are our own. Success is only from Allāh. All through His Infinite Grace.

Very quickly the book took over my life. I immersed myself in works by the great Sufi Masters, reading and re-reading, clarifying points and comparing notes as I compiled the terminology. I was a great devotee of Shaykh Muhyi-ud-Din Ibn al-‘Arabi, the twelfth century Andalusian Master. His metaphysical teachings permeated my worldview and he was the Master whose works I consulted the most. Sometimes the power of his knowledge had such an effect upon me that I would literally be bowled over under the influence! And it is interesting to note that Ibn al-‘Arabi was utterly opposed to sama, listening to spiritual music, and even forbade his murids from taking part in such gatherings!

Yet, as I worked at the computer in a sun filled room overlooking a hillside of tall gum trees I became increasingly aware of the compelling spiritual presence of the Pakistani qawwal. He was always there, beside me. I was being carried on a wave of divine influence. It is no exaggeration to say that I was drowning, spiritually, in his qawwali, in his voice, in his breath. After listening to a cassette or watching a video I would return to the computer with fresh insights and knowledge. I did not resist but surrendered to the influence allowing it to take me because I knew the book was under spiritual protection.

When the terminology was nearing completion a devastating bush fire made its approach to our timber house in the dense bushland. It was the dry season. The weather was fierce. Late one night I looked up the valley to the distant hilltops. Fire. A bushfire was starting to rage. Slowly it burned its way down the valley, getting closer and closer. By early morning our home was surrounded by volunteer firefighters. They chopped back the under growth and beat down the scrub to stop the fire reaching the house. They stood ready with water tanks and hoses. And as the fire burned I continued to work on the terminology. I knew this book had to be finished. Whilst a bushfire raged outside our home another fire was burning within my heart! I came downstairs and stood on the verandah and made du'a (supplication) for our home to be protected. Then I returned to the computer. The fire was so close. The smoke burned our eyes and filled our throats. The firefighters were worried. I was not. I had complete trust that our home would be safe. Nevertheless, I gathered together a few precious items, just in case we had to evacuate. And what were those precious items? What were the things that I felt must be saved if fire did sweep through the house? The floppy discs of the terminology and my videotapes of Sabri Brothers. The fire miraculously stopped only feet away from the house leaving us standing on a mat of lush green grass encircled by blackened and charred gum trees. The house was safe. The terminology was safe and the videotapes were safe.

The terminology was quickly finished. It's title: Sufi Terminology (al-Qamus al-Sufi): The Mystical Language of Islam. Throughout the writing of the Qamus the divine influence of Shaykh Sabri's spiritual presence had been profound. The book could never have been written without this overflow from the spiritual realm. I had to acknowledge the depth of the love, honour and respect I felt for him. But how could I acknowledge my indebtedness to him? The only way, such a small token gesture, was to place his name in the dedication. Yet, I still didn't even know his correct name. Then, just at the moment of need, when the manuscript and floppy disks were ready for the publisher, I received an imported CD that I had ordered months earlier. It was a Sabri Brothers' recording made in 1980 and on the cover was his name – Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri.

The work was finished. Alhamdulillah. All Praise to Allāh. I now had time to rest and reflect upon the spiritual influence of Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri. I knew nothing about him except that he had entered my life and entirely changed its course. I started experiencing an irresistible urge to meet him. Why did I want to meet him? I didn't really know why but I knew I just had to. I knew I would never find any rest until I had found this man. I had to express the depth of my love, honour and respect. I wanted to tell him that "Sufi Terminology" was really his. But where was I to find this Pakistani qawwal? The search then began. And this search took on greater and greater urgency with each passing day. I had absolutely no idea that Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri and his brothers were truly famous international artists. I did not know that their names were household words throughout Pakistan. For me he was a saintly man and it was for that reason I wanted to meet him.

Now, as I sit in Pakistan, wrapped in the love of the great Sufi Saints of the Chishti Silsila, I look back on those days of desperate searching when I knew very little about these Saints of the Indo-Pak Subcontinent. I knew very little about them but perhaps it was the Chishti Saints who were pulling on that long thread and drawing me to Pakistan.

On the wall in my home I had a reproduction of a beautiful Indian miniature of Khwaja Mu'inuddin Chishti and in my library I had several books about the Saint and his Shrine in Ajmer Sharif, Rajasthan. The Book of Sufi Healing, by the American Muslim, Shaykh Hakim Moinuddin Chishti, was vitally important. Who can say what blessings were emanating from that miniature and those books! My heart told me to write to the people at the Shrine seeking their advice as to the whereabouts of Sabri Brothers. I enclosed a few pieces of silver jewellery with the letter, a small gift from my heart to the Saint of the Shrine! Who can say how much blessing emerged from that gift! I waited, with a degree of patience, for a reply. Eventually a letter arrived. No! They did not know the address of the great Pakistani qawwal but suggested I make contact with the Pakistani Embassy in Australia, which I did, only to be abruptly dismissed by an obviously anti-qawwali secretary. I wrote to video companies in Dubai and Birmingham. I wrote to the Chishti Order of North America whose Head was Shaykh Hakim Moinuddin Chishti the author of The Book of Sufi Healing. Surely someone, somewhere could give me a clue, a hint, an indication. I waited.

It was a peaceful afternoon in January 1995. A host of birds, my usual visitots, perched in the wattle tree outside the back door. King parrots, lorikeets, magpies, spangled drongos, butcherbirds, sparrows.

The phone rang. A fax message started coming through. Anxiously I watched, hoping for the long awaited good news, a sign, a hint or indication about Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri's whereabouts. The letterhead of the North American Headquarters of the Chishti Order appeared. I was anxious. At last I would know.

Slowly the fax came through, creeping millimetre by millimetre. And as it crept out I read. And as I read my secure little world fell apart.

"As Allāh has Willed, it is our information that Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri has passed from this life within the year and is now with his Rabb, his Lord. Inna lillahi wa inna ilaihi raji'un (from Allāh we come and to Him is the returning)."

The words sank to the depths of my heart and lay there, motionless. The world became silent. All colours faded. The atmosphere grew heavy and weighed upon me like lead!

I stared at the fax in disbelief, not fully comprehending. "What? What! O No! It's too late!" I was devastated. Distraught. And on my prayer rug I let the tears flow.

"O! Allāh! No! He must still be alive. I must meet him. Please Allāh!" I begged. I pleaded. I didn't want to believe it. I tried to refuse to believe it! But if it really was true then all I could understand was that there was an impenetrable gulf that separated me in this earthly realm from him in the Unseen Realm. If it was true then he had left this world and it was too late! At that time I believed there was an impenetrable gulf separating us. There was not. There never had been. But I didn't then realize it.

My grief was extreme and I was not to be comforted by words. My emotions were totally out of control. I had lost balance, a balance that I had struggled to achieve throughout those years of long night vigils and ascetic disciplines. I tried to bridle the extremity of my feelings. How could I ever reveal and express what I was experiencing? Yet, the depth of my emotion was a mystery even to myself. Why was I so grieved, so distraught over this man? Was there a connection between an Australian woman and a famous Pakistani Sufi qawwal? Or was this a great Divine deception, a makr of the Almighty through which He tests His slaves, a Divine deception about which the Sufis are extremely wary? Was it a blessing or was it a curse? I didn't know. I was simply experiencing the most extreme sense of loss.

So I gave myself over to the sadness and turned on a video of Sabri Brothers. What else could I do? Where else could I find any sort of solace and comfort?

Truly great qawwals, those who are blessed with gifts from Allāh, can open the heart to profound insights. They can be the means through which Knowledge of the Divinity is unveiled to the heart, albeit for only a flash, an instant. Qawwali is the greatest soother and healer of wounds when the heart is afflicted with the unbearable pain of separation from the Beloved. When all else fails qawwali is the remedy for grief stricken lovers!

In my desolation I wrote distracted poems of longing and despair like so many other distressed lovers before me.

Your beauty broke me to pieces!

Your voice shattered my heart!

One glance from you destroyed me!

Then, the magic of your breath set me free!

It was true. He had passed away. But – even in the midst of my despair, he was there, with me just as he had been when I wrote the Sufi Terminology. His spiritual presence accompanied me throughout those dark days and long nights of sadness.

Finally I accepted the sad fact. I would never meet him! But I was anxious to learn how he had passed away. Did he suffer? Was he in pain? Who could tell me? How would I get these details? On one of my Sabri Brothers' videos there was a phone number of an agency in Birmingham. A man in the office answered my phone call of enquiry. He gave me two telephone numbers in Karachi with the assurance that I would get the answers I so desperately sought. The following day I phoned Karachi, thinking it was probably the number of a recording company or something of that nature. I spoke with a very gentle lady who sweetly and sadly gave me all the information I wanted.

“Who are you?” she asked. “

“No one. I am just an Australian lady who loves Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri so much.”

This was my first contact in the physical realm with members of the Sabri family. This softly spoken lady made me promise to keep in touch with the family. I did!

Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri had passed away on the 5th of April 1994. That meant when I first saw him on the video on the 23rd of April 1994 he was already in the intermediary space, the barzakh, between the Visible Realm and Unseen Realm. My connection with him was spiritual, across time and space.

4. The Boat and the Ocean

Which is the higher path, the Path of Knowledge or the Path of Love? Some of the Sufi Masters hold that one must know before one can love, whilst others believe one can only truly love what one already knows. Do we know the Beloved first and then love him because of that knowledge? Or do we love the Beloved and then come to know him? Is the 'ashiq, the lover, hierarchically superior to the 'arif, the knower, or vice-versa? Muhyi-ud-Din Ibn al-'Arabi declares that the knower is higher than the lover except when the lover is at the same time a knower. Just look at Mevlana Jalaluddin Rumi, the intoxicated lover, whirling in ecstasy around his Sun, his Shams Tabrizi! He said, "The way of love is not a subtle argument. The door there is devastation!" *

And a twentieth century Chishti Shaykh said, "The way of Love is the shortest, sweetest, the most interesting path, leading to the best and the most valuable results. It is like burning the forest instead of uprooting every single tree to clear the land. Lovers make the best raw material for Sufism whatever the charges of extravagance and frivolity leveled by society against them. The bigger the storm of love in a man's heart the greater his flight."

In the Sufi Path there is no place for a watered down, sentimental, insipid love. The love that consumes a dervish is a raging fire. The 'ishq of the dervish must never be confused with any romantic notions of love. The fire of 'ishq is a mighty Ocean, a fiery Ocean that burns and drowns simultaneously. The Path of Love is not scattered with fragrant rosepetals winding its way through groves of shady trees. Rather, it is a track across a burning desert, a channel through a stormy Ocean to the Beloved. But! The burning desert is sweet to the dervish. So too is the stormy Ocean!

Ultimately, each traveller on the Sufi Path will travel on the way that has been laid out for him since pre-Eternity. He will travel the destined path. And for some that may actually mean changing paths in mid-journey, from the Path of Knowledge to the Path of Love, falling off the Boat of Knowledge into the sweet Ocean of 'ishq. Mevlana Rumi says, "Intellectuals try not to drown, while the whole purpose of love is drowning!"*

After an extended period of seclusion in the bushland I was required to return to the city to embark upon an arduous journey within the academic arena. I was given directives from within my Tariqa to undertake a Master of Arts Degree. I was shocked. I had not been part of a tertiary institution for over 25 years and the mere thought of going back to university terrified me! But, having always endeavoured to carry out such commands I had no alternative, no choice.

It was during this period that a momentous sign was given to me in several dreams from the Realm of Imagination, 'alam-i khayal. The meaning of these dreams was blindingly apparent. The powerful spiritual connection between Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri and myself was revealed through symbolic images, images clearly representing my spiritual allegiance to him. A Ruhani-bai'at is an allegiance that takes place in the spiritual realm with a Master who has passed away. In my heart I knew that he was my Murshid.

From the tranquility of the bushland we moved to a rented tenth floor apartment in an inner city suburb of Brisbane. Initially this move disturbed me. The incessant noise of traffic, the proximity of neighbours with their booming televisions, and most particularly the thud of footsteps from the apartment above! But, a stage is reached on the spiritual journey, a stage after intense isolation or khalwa, when the traveller returns to society, to jalwa. Through Divine Grace, the gift of “isolation with Allāh” that was bestowed during the time of physical isolation can be retained and carried into society. This is known as khalwa in jalwa, isolation in society. In the midst of the thronging crowd one is still intimately conversing with ones Lord. Then one tastes the sweetness, halwa of khalwa in jalwa. A blessed condition!

I was fortunate to have connections in the Visual Arts Department of the Queensland University of Technology. It was the perfect opportunity for me to write a thesis about Tasawwuf and Art. The thesis, The Artist Transformed: Sufi Views on the Development of the Self and Art was to expand upon the Sufi doctrine and practices in order to show how this teaching has profound relevance to contemporary artists who are genuinely seeking Knowledge of the Divinity.

Soon after commencing the thesis I realized that Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri was yet again the catalyst and inspiration for this work. Just as he had carried me through the writing of Sufi Terminology so he was carrying me through The Artist Transformed. As I wrote I realized that I was writing about him without actually naming him. He was the embodiment of what I was endeavouring to explain and elaborate upon. He was the artist who had sought and found the Divinity within himself. He was the purified and empty vessel through whom the Divine Light poured into this earthly realm. He was the transformed artist through whom divine inspiration was entering the physical realm. And this inspiration kept flowing to me as I worked on the thesis.

As a traveller following the Sufi Path of Knowledge it was the teachings of Shaykh Muhyi-ud-Din Ibn al-‘Arabi, the supremely sober knower of Allāh, that continued to influence and colour my written work. Yet, my life was being overrun by the bewildering intoxication of an ‘ashiq, a lover. I was afloat on the Ocean of ‘ishq but I kept trying to get back into the Boat because I believed that was where I belonged. However, try as I might, I just kept falling back into that sweet Ocean!

It was a tedious struggle trying to get the university system to accept my un-academic style of writing, pouring as it did from my heart not from my head! This had been my major hesitation about returning to university. However I was blessed with having an extremely sensitive and spiritually inclined Supervisor, and as anyone who has undertaken a Postgraduate Degree knows, the quality of the chosen Supervisor is of paramount importance. Due to his intimate knowledge of the university structure he was able to take me through the labyrinth, side stepping obstacles and overcoming hurdles till the goal, the “Degree”, is achieved.

My Supervisor had a keen and genuine interest in the metaphysics of Muhyi-ud-Din Ibn al-‘Arabi, as have many other spiritual seekers in the West. Having read my books, he had an awareness of the adab spiritual courtesy that must be observed with the people of Tasawwuf and therefore his respect for me was high indeed. Eventually I was awarded a Master of Arts Degree. And how happy and relieved I was when it was all over.

This was 1997, the year when Allāh Almighty called me to His House. Haj: the dream of every Muslim. Haj is Haj. Inexpressible. Only the one who has performed Haj can comprehend that Haj is inexpressible. Only the one who has tasted knows! He knows that he cannot express the experience of Haj.

Yet, certain moments and experiences not directly related to the majesty of Haj can be told, experiences directly related to my spiritual connection with Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri. Mehmood, Haji Saheb's youngest brother, has urged me to include them in this book. So:

We were in a plane full of Hajjis from Australia flying on route to Jeddah. It was two in the morning on April 5th in the year 1997, a special day. Why a special day? It was exactly three years since Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri had passed away in Karachi. I looked at the navigation map displayed on the video screen in the plane, wondering where we were on this special day. And where were we? Our plane was flying over Karachi! And I thought, "Haji Saheb is taking me to Madina. We are going together." Late in the night of that same day, April 5th, we were offering our prayers at the Masjid Nabawi in Madina: a journey from Karachi to Madina on April 5th. And there is no coincidence!

Madina Munawwara. Madina is called the Luminous. Madina is bathed in the most glorious rose-coloured Light. Madina is Divine Light. Madina is Divine Beauty. Madina is Divine Compassion. Madina is Divine Tenderness. Madina is Divine Love. Madina is the Home of the Beloved of Allāh.

Madina is inexpressibly beautiful, yet somehow the Sabri Brothers managed to express this inexpressible beauty and wonder. Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri was an 'ashiq-e Rasul, a lover of the Holy Prophet Muhammad. He was lost in 'ishq-e Muhammadi. His voice and his breath captured and released the intensity of emotion that is to be experienced in Madina: Madina with all its heart-breaking, heart-melting Beauty. The Sabri Brothers fill our hearts with overflowing love of our Prophet. And it is for this reason that they are said to be the Prophet's Gift to us.

Surely Sabri Brothers' most loved qawwali must be Tajdar-e-Haram:

*"O! King of the Holy Sanctuary
Cast your glance of tender munificence upon us, the grief-strickened,
So our ill luck may change.
There is no one here to help us, the grief-strickened.
We have come to your doorstep.
Cast your glance of tender munificence upon us
Or we shall die here, on your doorstep, reciting your name."*

The comment was made, "The Sabri Brothers will enter Jannat, Paradise, because of Tajdar-e-Haram." Ameen. Ameen. Ameen.

In my diary I wrote:

“In Madina Munawwara I was overwhelmed by the presence of Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri. He was with me, constantly. Wherever I was, he was. He walked beside me. He sat beside me. He ate with me. He was always there, right beside me. Sometimes I actually felt myself encased within his large frame. At other times I simply felt the warmth of his smile, an all-encompassing tenderness. His presence was most powerful within and around the Masjid Nabawi. I could almost feel his breath. I could almost feel his touch. At times I thought that if I reached out my hand I would touch his! It was overwhelmingly beautiful. It was real.”

To leave Madina is to experience intense sadness. You do not want to leave. You want to stay – forever and ever. Then, as soon as you have left you simply yearn to return.

From Madina we journeyed to Holy Makka for Haj. Haj is beyond words. Haj is Pure Majesty. Haj has to be experienced. It cannot be described.

The Sabri Brothers sing a stirring qawwali about Haj, “Labayk Allahumma Labayk”. The poetry is by Adeeb Raypuri. I played it incessantly before departing for the Sacred Journey. At the end of the qawwali there are some poignant words, “If it is your destiny to stand at Arafat remember us in your du’a and pray that our names are written as slaves of Mustafa.”

Arafat! Arafat is Haj. Arafat is where each pilgrim stands bare and alone, in the Presence of Allāh Almighty. Arafat is annihilation, the pulverizing of the ego. The self reduced to naught. Standing on the earth under the blazing sun of Arabia I made the du’a “Ya Allāh! Bless and love Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri and his brothers, Haji Kamal and Haji Maqbool and bless and love Mehmood. Write their names as lovers and slaves of Your Beloved, Muhammad al-Mustafa! Ameen. Ameen. Ameen.”

After the Haj we were able to remain in the Holy City for a further two weeks. The obvious outer reasons being the congestion caused by the mass exodus of hajjis plus some complications with the planning of our Australian tour managers. The true reason was that the Almighty was allowing us to stay at His House a little longer. It was not yet time for us to depart.

So it was my kismet to be in Holy Makka on April 23, another special day in my personal calendar. I awoke in the wee small hours of the morning. It was exactly three years since my initial encounter with the Sabri Brothers on that life altering video. I rose from my bed at 2am and prepared myself for Umrah. And with the intention, “This Umrah is my gift for Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri” I performed the rights of the Lesser Pilgrimage in his name. What greater gift could I give him?

After six weeks in Arabia we returned to Australia. I phoned through to Karachi to give salaams to the Sabri Brothers after my Haj. A man with a deep and gentle voice answered; my first encounter with Mehmood Ghaznavi, the youngest of the brothers. A vital connection was made during that phone conversation. Linked, spiritually, across thousands of miles of ocean, I felt as though I had known him all my life. The thread!

Fakhruddin 'Iraqi said, "Often Love conquers the ear before the eye." **

Earlier in the year, before Haj, when I had been working on my thesis The Artist Transformed I had experienced a powerful need to devote an entire book to Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri and his brothers, in the future, if possible. Then after my Haj I saw the dream in which Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri had told Nusrat Fateh Ali Khan "this is the lady who is going to write the book about me." A confirmation. An approval. A directive even! This dream strengthened the urge, and as the urge developed and grew stronger I started to daydream, planning how I would go to Pakistan, one day. It seemed like a wild daydream that could never manifest. How could I go to Pakistan alone? But I kept planning and dreaming. Who knows? Perhaps! That thread, whose end I was hanging onto, was growing taut as slowly I was being pulled!

Once again a directive came from the Tariqa. I was required to undertake the work on Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri as a Doctoral dissertation. So after returning from Haj I started working on a proposal for the next thesis, titled The Art of Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri: Its Place Within the Tradition of Sufi Music.

I worked happily by myself in my room at my computer. The words flowed and I started to immerse myself in the research. But when I went back into the university atmosphere I immediately encountered barriers. The man who was to be my Principal Supervisor did not have the spiritual yearning or sensitivity of my previous Supervisor. He insisted that I write in a more academic style. I knew I could not. I did not want to. Qawwali is from the heart not the head and as far as I was concerned academia meant death to The Art of Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri. How could I fit the Ocean of Love that is qawwali into the thimble of academia?

"You've seen a glob of oil on water? That's how a lover sits with intellectuals, there, but alone in a circle of himself.

*Some intellectual tries to give sound advice to a lover.
All he hears back is, I love you.
I love you."*

(Mevlana Jalaluddin Rumi) *

But remember, this is not a sentimentalized “I love you. I love you.” These are the words of an ecstatic lover! This lover is not saying, “I love you” to anyone other than the Beloved because everywhere he looks he sees only the Beloved!

So I took little or no notice of the intellectual’s advice. I decided to think about academic styles later! I just wanted to start working. I wanted to go to Pakistan. I yearned to make ziyarat to the Mazar of Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri. But how was I to get to Pakistan?

Okay, I thought! If I am in the university system I will take advantage of everything and anything it has to offer me. I applied for a travel grant and a scholarship. But there were complications and contradictions with the formalities of my Master of Arts Degree. These delays meant my applications for grant and scholarship were too late. I was told to put everything on hold for one year. I couldn’t. I felt I could not wait another month let alone another year! I was burning up inside. I had to get to Karachi somehow. That was all I knew. Unseen forces were attracting and drawing me there. That thread again! I started planning, in earnest, to go to Pakistan. How was I to get there? There must be a way! The wild daydream was beginning to manifest!

Before leaving Australia I had very brief contact with a Pakistani man from Lahore. His name was Tariq and he was a doctor. Throughout his life in Pakistan he had searched for, but never found, a suitable Murshid. He was destined to find his Murshid in Australia. A Pakistani man whose spiritual journey brought him to Australia and an Australian woman whose spiritual journey would take her to Pakistan!

I remember only one thing Tariq said to me during our short meeting. It was a heartfelt remark the significance of which was to unfold within the coming months. And I remember that as he uttered the words his eyes gleamed with inner light.

“Amatullah!” he said. “Amatullah! Allāh manifested you in Australia but... you belong to the Mazars of Pakistan!”

5. “Allāh manifested you in Australia but ...”

My PIA flight landed at Lahore International Airport at six o'clock on a chilly January morning in 1998. It was the second day of Eid al-Fitr. I crossed the windy tarmac to Passport Control. I was a bundle of mixed emotions. Anticipation. Anxiety. Apprehension. Expectation. Elation. Excitement. Dread. Fear. Nervousness. Even a sense of freedom! I had never done anything like this in my life. Travelling alone in the tight grip of my obsession. What was awaiting me in this strange new country?

A passing airport vehicle blew thick black clouds of diesel smoke and fumes directly into my face, heralding my arrival. So! This is Pakistan! Pulling my scarf tightly over my nose and mouth I crossed the threshold and entered Pakistan; drawn and attracted by the unseen spiritual forces of the great Sufi Saints and their lovers.

I had come to Pakistan to meet the Sabri Brothers who live in Karachi, so why should I first visit Lahore? Now I understand that it was not me who was doing the planning. I was being guided and directed, protected through this entire journey! Adab, spiritual courtesy required that before doing anything in Pakistan I must first visit and give salaams to the patron Saint of Lahore.

The shrine of a Sufi saint is called a Mazar and the visit to a Mazar is known as a ziyarat. One can only make a ziyarat to the Mazar of a Sufi Saint if and when the Saint himself calls one to his presence. Without this call one can never reach the threshold of the Saint. This is the belief of those who believe in the Sufi Saints and their Shrines.

Within the Islamic community in Pakistan mention of the word “Mazar” can create a multitude of reactions, ranging from an upheaval of indignation and a storm of outrage to an all-pervading spiritual sweetness and selfless joy. “Mazar” can ignite an explosive of hatred and contempt or it can light a lamp of tender love and devotion. Cries of “bid'at”, innovation, have little or no effect upon the hearts of the lovers of the Sufi Saints, those wonderful and varied human beings, the devotees, the lovers, the needy, the sick, who often traverse great distances under harsh conditions in order to reach the thresholds of the courts of their beloved Saints.

In Lahore I stayed with a family who had become my friends via telephone conversations. Mother and son were firm believers in the Sufi Saints, both being murids of a Chishti Shaykh, and it was the son who had contacted me whilst he was studying in Australia. And so we became close friends via the telephone, though we never actually met in Australia. Our first meeting was at Lahore Airport on that chilly January morning.

On my first night in Pakistan my friends took me on my first ziyarat to my first Mazar. We entered the mysterious lanes and crowded alleyways surrounding the blessed court of Lahore's patron Saint, Hazrat Syed Ali al-Hujwiri, lovingly known as Data Ganj Baksh and Data Saheb.

Hazrat Syed Ali Bin Uthman al-Hujwiri was born in Ghazni, Afghanistan around the year 400A H (1009 AD). After travelling widely on his spiritual quest he was instructed by his Murshid to proceed to Lahore and spread the message of Islam. His book, Kashf-ul-Mahjub, written at the request of a student of Sufism, is the earliest Persian Treatise on Sufism. Hazrat Nizamuddin Awliya said of Kashf-ul-Mahjub, "Whoever amongst you is unable to find a Pir may read this book thoroughly and it will enable him to succeed in his mission." That is, for he who has no Shaykh let Kashf-ul-Mahjub be his Shaykh. Hazrat Shahidullah Faridi, the Englishman who gave up a life of ease and luxury in England to pursue the spiritual Path in India, embraced Islam in 1936 after reading Kashf-ul-Mahjub.

In 561 AH (1165 AD) ninety-six years after the passing of Data Saheb, Khwaja Mu'inuddin Chishti performed his 40-day retreat at the Mazar. After his seclusion and spiritual illumination he recited the following verses, "Thou art Ganj Baksh, the Bestower of Spiritual Treasures, in both worlds. Thou art the manifestation of the Glory of Allāh. Thou art an accomplished guide for those who are perfect and Thou showeth the Way to those who have gone astray." Since that time Hazrat Ali al-Hujwiri has been known as Data Ganj Baksh, the Bestower of Spiritual Treasures. Such was the spiritual rank of Data Saheb! Such was the spiritual rank of Khwaja Saheb!

Baba Fariduddin Ganj-i Shakar also performed his 40-day retreat near the Mazar. Whenever Baba Farid would make ziyarat to the Mazar of Data Saheb he would reach a certain place and fall down in prostration. At this place he would be in a state of awe because, with his basirah, his inner eye, the eye of his heart, he could "see" the descent of Rahmat, Divine Mercy, raining down upon the Mazar. He would fall to the earth in humility and then proceed to the Shrine on his hands and knees. Such was the spiritual rank of Data Saheb! Such was the spiritual rank of Baba Farid!

I made my way amongst the strangest array of people thronging around the outskirts of the Mazar. Past old men with brown wrinkled faces, ragged clothes and radiant smiles. Past dervishes in colorful patchwork caps with wooden alms bowls. Past longhaired malangs, those lost in Love of the Divinity, with their iron bracelets and anklets jangling and strings of fake amber beads swaying around their necks. Past gangs of alert sneaky street urchins, ready to pick any unguarded pocket or purse and past queues of hungry silent beggars waiting for the gift of food.

Passing the sellers of garlands and chadars I caught a waft of a delicate yet heady fragrance, a fragrance unique to Pakistan and her Mazars. Red roses. Not like the western counterparts with flamboyant blooms and no aroma. These Pakistani roses, the most humble and modest of roses, have retained the essence of rose and their fragrance is for me the symbol of the Pakistan I now know and love. Fragrant red rose petals lovingly carried by devotees to be scattered over the resting places of the Saints.

Here at Data Saheb's Mazar on my first ziyarat I carefully observed the adab, the courtesy and etiquette that is essential when one is called to the presence of a friend of Allāh. Quiet footsteps, soft swishing garments, gentle caresses of cool marble filigree, eyes cast down in respectful greeting, hands raised high in supplication, sitting quietly in meditation, rhythm of clicking prayer beads and whispered remembrances. Lucky and blessed are those who receive faizan, inspiration at the Mazars of Data Saheb and other Sufi Saints.

Hazrat Wahid Baksh Rabbani (1910-1995AD), the twentieth century Chishti Saint who translated Kashf-ul-Mahjub into English, has said that the amount of faizan, inspiration, one receives from the Saint of the Mazar very much depends on the effort one has made at home. The more prayer and zikr and fasting and spiritual exercises one does the greater is one's power of reception at the Mazar. And this in turn serves as a greater incentive for increased endeavour at home. He also advised murids to go only to the Mazars of Saints of their own Silsila because it may happen that the murid receives faizan that is not suited to his spiritual status. And he recommended that his murids concentrate only on the Saint. No prayers or Quranic recitation or zikr. This, he says, can be done at home. In the presence of the Saint one should concentrate solely and purely upon the Saint.

Some people who visit the Mazars are put-off or discouraged and disheartened by the "circus of crazy people" who mill around the outside. I love what Hazrat Rabbani wrote regarding this spectacle. "But the greatest purpose which mad men and women and unwanted human beings, indulging in antinomian activities, serve, is this: they are there to counterbalance the enormous torrents of blessings, charms and fascinations, which, if left unimpaired by the clowns, would turn people mad by their intensity. This is as well the philosophy underlying all sins and darkneses in the world, as looked at from the higher spiritual Divine angle. God is Beauty! What He created is nothing but Beauty."

The malangs are beautiful. The faqirs are beautiful, the beggars and street urchins are all beautiful. And who really knows which are the true lovers of Allāh? "My saints are under My domes and only I know them."

Hundreds of pigeons nestle on the green dome of the Mazar of Data Ganj Baksh, the soft sound of fluttering wings and gentle cooing enveloping the devotees beneath in yet another beauty.

"Allāh manifested you in Australia but..."

Six years after my initial visit to Data Saheb's I was taken to meet an old man, a very special old man so I was told. I think he would prefer to remain anonymous therefore I will not mention his name. He owned a small teashop on a busy main road quite near to the Darbar of Data Saheb. This old chai wala was connected to Data Saheb so I was told. Daily he would make ziyarat to the Mazar. His love for Data Saheb was limitless. One day within his heart he requested Data Saheb to reveal himself. The following morning this old chai wala started out on his ziyarat. He climbed the stairs leading to the marble courtyard and when he looked towards the Mazar he was awestruck. All he could see was the wings of angels, thousands and thousands and thousands of angels' wings, spread over every inch of the courtyard, covering every millimetre of the Mazar and the green dome. He was humbled to the depths. How could he have had the impudence, the audacity, the pride and boldness to ask Data Saheb to disclose himself! Look at the rank of Data Saheb! The old chai wala retraced his steps along the lanes and alleyways and along the main road back to his chai shop. He was ashamed. How could such as he dare, ever dare to even set foot anywhere near to the Darbar let alone climb the stairs and approach the Saint? He stayed away from the Darbar for three years. Then one day a presence approached him, enveloped him in his arms and told him to return. It was Data Saheb himself come to fetch him and bring him back! Data Ganj Baksh, the Bestower of Treasures.

My love for this old chai wala was instant from the moment my eyes met his. He was sitting beside his chai shop under a shady tree. As we walked towards him he smiled the most radiant smile at me. It was a smile of instant recognition. Then he cast down his eyes and spoke to the friend who had brought me. He said many words in Urdu. He said many things about me! Wonderful things. He knew all about me. The eye of his heart, his basira, was open. This man who had seen the wings of angels! He said that I had been to the bottom of the Ocean and I didn't even know where I had been or what I had done! And he told me to be happy, just to be happy! On my next visit to Lahore I went to him again. He asked me if I had been thinking of him. I told him I had and that often I could see his face in front of me. He smiled that radiant smile again and said he too had been thinking of me. Then he added, "And I know that now you are happy!"

On my second day in Pakistan we made a decisive journey, the long journey by road to a small town in the Punjab called Pakpattan Sharif. I knew nothing about Pakpattan Sharif, but my friends had been insistent upon us making the journey, all of them anxious to take me to the "very special Mazar" of Baba Fariduddin Ganj-i-Shakar a Sufi Saint about whom I knew very little.

The sugar cane was being harvested in the Punjab and the roads were blocked with trucks and tractors piled high with precariously swaying mountains of sharp cane. Yet, our mood was joyous. We were driving through sweetness. Surrounded by sweetness on our way to the sweetness of Ganj-i-Shakar. There are various stories related to this name Ganj-i-Shakar, meaning Treasury of Sugar or Sweetness.

As a young man Baba Fariduddin undertook many austerities in his spiritual endeavour. On one occasion he had been fasting for three consecutive days and became weak and overcome by hunger. In order to allay his hunger he put some small pebbles in his mouth. They immediately turned into sugar. Another story relates how Baba Farid met some sugar traders travelling by camel. He enquired what they were carrying. Now, these traders, being greedy merchants, did not want Baba Farid to know it was sugar in case he asked for some. So they replied that they were carrying salt. To which Baba Farid replied, "Let it be salt." When the traders reached Delhi they were astounded to find their camels loaded with salt. They rapidly returned to Baba Farid seeking his forgiveness for their deception. "Let it be sugar!" said Baba Farid. And so the salt became sugar!

We were carefree and in high spirits as we drove through this sweetness. To prepare ourselves for the encounter at the Mazar we listened to the Sabri Brothers throughout the five-hour journey from Lahore. Our mood was joyous, almost intoxicated, as we reached the foot of the hill upon which spreads the blessed Darbar of Baba Farid. This was my first ziyarat to the Mazar of a Chishti Saint. A very significant visit!

We climbed the steep alley through the bazaar, leading to the entrance of the Darbar. As at Data Saheb's now at Baba Saheb's, past the sellers of rose garlands. Ahh! That fragrance again! Past the sellers of chadors and itr and past the jewellery and cassette shops. Getting closer and closer. Climbing higher and higher. Steeper and steeper. "Allāh manifested you in Australia but..." Getting closer and closer to Hazrat Baba Fariduddin Ganj-i-Shakar.

Fariduddin Mas'ud (Baba Farid) was born in 571 AH (1175 AD) in Kathwal, a town near Multan. His first teacher was his pious and highly spiritual mother. She kindled the fire of Divine Love within him, a fire that was to blaze brightly and dominate his entire being throughout his long life. As a young child he devoted himself to prayer and fasting. Once, an eminent mystic Shaykh Jalaluddin Tabrizi passed through Kathwal and found the young Fariduddin immersed in his devotions beside the town's mosque. The Shaykh offered Fariduddin the gift of a pomegranate, but because he was fasting he declined to take the whole fruit and accepted only one seed with which to break his fast. From this one pomegranate seed he received immense spiritual illumination. He regretted not having taken the whole fruit until his Pir-O-Murshid Khwaja Qutbuddin Bakhtiyar Kaki told him in later years, "All the spiritual blessing was in that one seed; it was destined for you and it reached you. There was nothing in the rest of the fruit."

The first time Baba Farid saw Khwaja Qutbuddin he was praying in a mosque in Multan. So overcome with emotion was Baba Farid that he kissed the feet of Khwaja Qutbuddin and begged him for the "alchemy" of his glance. Then amidst a noble assembly of Chishti and Suhrawardi dervishes Khwaja Qutbuddin gave him his hand in initiation (bai'at).

It has been said that no saint has ever excelled Baba Farid in his devotions and spiritual asceticism. His long life was filled with prayer, vigil and fasting. He yearned to break down all barriers between his Lord and himself. Though he never sought fame, the very idea being abhorrent to him, he is renowned for one harsh discipline, the inverted chilla, (Chilla-i-Ma'kus). This he performed in Uch Sharif. For forty days and nights he hung upside down in a well and devoted himself to constant zikr.

Baba Farid sat at his Pir-O-Murshid's feet for many years in Delhi, traversing the stages of his spiritual journey. But he longed to flee to a place of tranquility where he could devote himself entirely to Allāh. When his Pir-O-Murshid Khwaja Qutbuddin tearfully gave permission for Baba Farid to depart he indicated that he would be his successor as Head of the Chishti Silsila. In isolation Baba Farid continued his devotions and austere disciplines, yet he was not destined to live a secluded life. Wherever he went the people flocked around him, seeking his blessings and guidance. His period of isolation came to an end and eventually he settled in Ajodhan, present day Pakpattan Sharif, where he flung open his doors saying, "Come to me one by one so that I may attend to you individually." And devotees and lovers have been flocking to Pakpattan Sharif ever since, seeking his love and spiritual nourishment and receiving his faizan.

Throughout his life Baba Fariduddin Ganj-i Shakar would spend many hours of his nights in prostration ceaselessly reciting, "I die for Thee and I live for Thee." The great Chishti Saint expired his last breath on the evening of 5th Muharram 664 AH (1265 AD). His last words were, "Ya Hayy, Ya Qayyum" (O Living, O Eternal).

We reached the entrance to the courtyard. The tall heavy doors were opened wide in welcome to all the devotees and lovers of the Sufi Saint. I removed my shoes, bent forwards and touched the threshold, placed my hands on my heart and my eyes; gestures of love and honour and respect for the Saint. "Allāh manifested you in Australia but..."

Stepping gently across the shiny green doorframe I entered the courtyard, the Darbar, of Hazrat Baba Fariduddin Ganj-i-Shakar. The marble paving was cool and the air fresh. I could feel my heart beating as I slowly advanced. I felt incredibly light, as though my feet were not even touching the ground. I looked around: the expanse of marble, that ancient tree, those ragged children and the blessed dome. Amazing! It was like a beautiful dreamscape yet it was all so familiar. I felt as though I had always known this place. The atmosphere was joyous and pervaded by love. I felt perfectly at peace. Surrounded by contentment. And to myself I softly whispered, "I've come home!" And, the welcome I received was that of a true homecoming.

A great overflowing of barkat, blessing, showered upon us. The Mazar whose inner sanctum is forbidden to women nonetheless seemed to beckon us and open its doors wide. And now in retrospect I believe that the Saint himself Baba Farid opened his arms in a loving embrace, an embrace within which I have been firmly held ever since! The guardian at the Mazar who must have had a keen and alert sixth sense, urged me closer and a little closer and yet closer still! We were almost inside, but, not quite! That was forbidden. I kissed the silver step for the first time. Many times there have been since then and insha' Allāh there are many times yet to come! Garlands of those heavenly scented roses were lifted from the Mazar itself and ceremoniously placed around my neck! Why so much honour?

Gates were then unlocked and we were ushered into a small semi-enclosed room directly beside the Mazar. Here we sat before the two splendid silver doors, the Bahishti Darwaza or Gates of Paradise that open directly into the Mazar. After tranquil moments spent in contemplation and prayer we were beckoned to follow the guardian. Come! Come!

We passed under a covered archway and into a dark room. I breathed in the heavy heady fragrance of accumulated rose-petals and rose-drenched chadors recently removed from the Mazar. These pieces of cloth had absorbed into themselves an abundance of blessings having been in close proximity to the great saint and the spiritual power emanating from him and his resting place. A green chadar, permeated through and through with these celestial scented blessings, was taken from a large wooden trunk and placed in my waiting hands. So much honour! A true homecoming!

Outside in the dazzling radiance of the sunlight surrounded by smiling faces and many upturned hands, an extraordinary faqir woman came to me. Dressed in black qamis shalwar with a green turban wound around her head, dozens of silver rings gleaming on both hands, she leaned towards me and whispered in Urdu, “Now you can go away happy!” Who was she? I knew her! But of course, I had seen her in that memorable Sabri Brothers’ video at the Mazar of ‘Abdullah Shah Ghazi. She had danced in ecstasy in front of Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri as he sang a qawwali in honour of the great Saint of Sindh Hazrat Lal Shahbaz Qalandar.

I was given a message of heavy significance on this my first ziyarat to Baba Fariduddin Ganj-i Shakar. As one of my companions sat in deep contemplation (muraqaba) within the inner sanctum of the Mazar his heart received a message from Baba Saheb. The words conveyed to his heart were, “Amatullah may leave but ... I will keep her heart with me here in Pakistan!”

The interconnectedness of encounters and events is bewildering! I don’t believe in chance meetings or coincidences. Our destinies are interwoven with all the destinies of all the people we encounter on our journey through life. We must always be on the alert to read the indications and signs that surround us. Catch onto the thread! It is all a Divine Plan. A word, a glance, a meeting to bring us to the beloveds of the Beloved of Allāh (fana fi-sh-Shaykh), and to the Beloved of Allāh (fana fi-r-Rasul) and to Allāh, the Beloved (fana fi’llah). One simply has to flow into ones destiny, the easiest thing to say, yet the hardest thing to do. “The Path is easy. It is man who is complicated!”

I met a tall gently spoken man. He and his companion had just returned from a visit to the Mazar of Khwaja Mu’innuddin Chishti in Ajmer Sharif, Rajasthan in India. Both were luminous with love! They brought with them the blessings of India’s most exalted Sufi Saint. The man gave me a gift, a sacred yellow and red thread (dhangas or ghalawat), from the Mazar in Ajmer Sharif.

When I visited Ajmer Sharif the following year these yellow and red woollen threads were everywhere to be seen, around peoples necks or on their wrists. The threads were tied to the filigree marble screens around the Mazar and onto the gates, by devotees seeking the Saint’s blessings and answers to their prayers. Bundles of the yellow and red threads were displayed for sale in every lane and alleyway. The perfect gift to give loved ones when a devotee returned home after his or her ziyarat. Why the colours yellow and red? What is their significance? The sandy yellow colour symbolizes humility, like that of the earth. The red colour symbolizes 'ishq-e haqiqi or True Love. These being the two qualities that the Mashaiyakh of the Chishtiyya Silsila strive to imbue into their murids.

As the man placed the yellow and red thread around my neck he said, “You are a Chishti!” How did he know that I was a Chishti when even I did not know that I was a Chishti? At that time I was attached to another Tariqa, but he could see a Chishti. He was a murid of Hazrat Shahidullah Faridi, an Englishman who embraced Islam in 1936 after reading Data Saheb’s Treatise on Sufism Kashf-ul-Mahjub. Destined to become a Sufi Master of the Chishti Silsila, dedicating his life to his many murids, Hazrat Shahidullah was intimately connected to Baba Fariduddin Ganj-i Shakar. How strange that I had included so many extracts from Hazrat Shahidullah Faridi’s writings in my first book And the Sky Is Not the Limit. And here was this man, his murid, telling me “You are a Chishti!”

So many indications were coming to me. I was being drawn and attracted by the Chishti Saints. Invisible hands in the Unseen Realm were pulling the thread. In retrospect I can see the incredible linking of events and meetings, the tightening of the thread.

It was nearing time to fly south to Karachi for the long awaited meeting with the Sabris. But one more saint was calling me to his presence. I could not leave the north without giving my salaams to Hazrat Baba Bullhe Shah, the great Sufi poet of the Punjab whose ecstatic verses form an integral part of the qawwals’ repertoire.

On our way to Qasur, a small town some distance from Lahore, our car had a flat tyre so we stood in the chilly wind on the noisy roadside till it could be repaired in the next village. One of my companions exclaimed, “Baba Bullhe Shah doesn’t want us to reach just yet!” Of course Sabri Brothers accompanied us all the way on the cassette player. Our spirits were soaring as we entered the town. With my two male friends I entered the Mazar of this intoxicated Sufi poet and as I stood quietly reciting al-Fatiha a guard approached me and abruptly told me to leave. I was bewildered! Men Only! Oh yes, yet another area where “women are forbidden”. I was terribly upset, being disturbed in such a rough manner especially whilst reciting holy verses. And tears slipped from my eyes. Woman! Condemned to stand outside! My heart objected: “There is no gender in spirituality!!”

What an ironical situation! To be ejected from the Mazar of a Saint who himself had been rejected by the surrounding orthodoxy in his own lifetime! But, I had only been in Pakistan for two weeks and was too shy and intimidated to stand my ground.

Baba Bullhe Shah was born in 1680 AD in Ucch Sharif, the city of Saints, near Bahawalpur. At the age of six his father moved to Qasur, a small village outside of Lahore where Bullhe Shah ('Abdullah was his name) received strictly orthodox religious training. Bullhe Shah began writing poems of ecstatic love, not in sophisticated Persian but in the local Punjabi dialect. He also attacked the prevailing attitudes of the exoteric scholars of his time. His relationship with his Murshid Shah Inayat, of the Qadiriyya Silsila, is legendary. Shah Inayat strongly disapproved of Bullhe Shah's "deviationist" poetry and warned him to abstain from these verbal attacks against orthodoxy. Bullhe Shah did not heed his Murshid's advice. It is said that Shah Inayat turned Bullhe Shah away from his home. In the pain of his separation from his Murshid Baba Bullhe Shah started playing the sarangi and singing and dancing. His yearning for True Knowledge of Allah and his grief at being separated from Shah Inayat were poured forth in his poems. He came to his Murshid, singing and dancing, pleading to be forgiven. His poem, "Teray 'Ishq Nachaya" (Your Love Makes me Dance), a favourite in the qawwals' repertoire, expresses his desperate plight, his desolation and helplessness. Shah Inayat relented and took his disciple back again. Bullhe was Bhulla (lost) without his Murshid! In 1758, after Baba Bullhe Shah passed away his dead body was laid out in the sun whilst the mullahs of the town argued, disputing his right to be buried in a public graveyard. Today the graveyard is in ruins yet the tomb of the Saint is a centre of blessing, where the privileged few pay vast amounts of money to be buried, in close proximity to Baba Bullhe Shah, the man they once rejected.

The guard may have treated me badly but the Saint Baba Bullhe Shah knew he had a guest from the other side of the world. He knew a lover was standing outside wanting to come in. A gift was handed to me from inside the Mazar – those heavenly rose-garlands – placed around my neck, a gift from the saint himself. As in Pakpattan Sharif so now in Qasur: we were ushered across the courtyard, down a colonnade and into a small heavily padlocked room, thick with heavy fragrance. Here we were given the rare honour and privilege of touching and kissing the prayer cap and prayer rug of the Saint. And then, the ultimate gift from Baba Bullhe Shah, a green chadar from his Mazar was placed in my hands with respect and dignity. The abrupt dismissal from the Mazar had been utterly negated by these acts of love coming directly from the Saint.

The Saints of Pakistan were showering me with love and blessings. Drawing me into their hearts. I flew south to Karachi to the long-awaited destined meeting with Mehmood Ghaznavi Sabri and members of the extended Sabri family.

6. Full Circle to ‘Abdullah Shah Ghazi Baba

Lapping expectantly around the Arrivals exit at Karachi airport – a sea of brown faces. I am so agitated, nervous and uncomfortable, pushing my loaded trolley amongst this crowd, feeling utterly conspicuous, white Muslim lady! What will I ever say to Mehmood Sabri who is to meet me? How will I act? The moment has arrived and now I just want to flee the scene! Why oh why did I ever want to come to Pakistan alone? I am so stupid! Madness. Madness! But, too late to stop now! You must face the music and ... dance!

Due to unforeseen circumstances Mehmood Sabri had been unable to meet me at the airport. I was respectfully greeted by members of Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri’s family and quickly whisked away in a silver-painted 60’s limousine to the heavily congested and over-populated suburb of Liaquatabad. As I stepped through the door to the Sabri home his daughters placed garland upon garland of those fragrant red roses around my neck. Haji Saheb’s widow, daughters and sons all welcomed me as a long lost sister and showered me with generosity and affection. My bags were carried into a separate room specially prepared for me. “This is our father’s room. It is your room.” The room of Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri! Needless to say I was totally dazed. Me, to stay in the room of such a great man, a man who I considered and still consider a Saint.

Hours later Mehmood and I finally met – in the room of Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri. This is where the destined meeting was to take place, under the watchful gaze and spiritual presence of Mehmood’s big brother! In retrospect I understand why we did not meet at the Airport. Impulsively I pulled a book from my suitcase. It was an Urdu book about some Sufi Saints and it contained a beautiful glossy photo of the Mazar of Hazrat Alauddin Sabir in Kalyar Sharif, India. When I showed the photo to Mehmood he immediately kissed it and pressed it to his eyes. I gave him that book. This was my initial direct experience of the immense love and respect that the Sabris have for all the Sufi Saints.

As I write these words in 2004, I look back and feel that somehow, a major change has occurred in my life after each ziyarat to Baba Fariduddin Ganj-i Shakar in Pakpattan Sharif. It is as though each ziyarat has been a turning point, a landmark or monumental obelisk on my spiritual horizon. Or a pull on the thread! It was after my first ziyarat that I met Mehmood Sabri and his brothers.

In the pitch darkness of one of Karachi’s frequent blackouts I first met Haji Kamal Sabri, the elder brother with the husky rough voice. Mehmood had to shout into his near-deaf ears that it was “Amatullah from Australia!” Forty years of amplified dholak drumming had taken their toll on Kamal Saheb’s eardrums! Kamal embraced me warmly like a daughter and when the lights eventually came on I was utterly enchanted by his eyes – love simply poured forth from them. The following day I met Haji Maqbool Ahmed Sabri, the leader of the group, a small man with the delicate hands of a maestro. He had suffered greatly, several years earlier, in a near fatal motorcycle accident which left him with a severely damaged leg. Doctors had given him a five percent chance of surviving but Allāh had given him one hundred percent certainty of surviving! The Sabri Brothers had to continue their mission of spreading the Message of Love to the world.

Exactly one year earlier, back in Australia, in another insightful dream I had seen the grave of Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri, a simple white marble slab. In the dream I asked Haji Kamal Sabri for permission to visit the grave to sit in meditation and receive faizan, inspiration and divine overflow. Haji Kamal's reply had been, "Yes! He knows you are coming. He is expecting you and is waiting for you." Then, still in the dream, with the eye of my heart I look at the grave. Upon the white marble slab I see a beautiful large Holy Qur'an. Each page is golden silk and upon each golden silk page the Words of Allāh are written in celestial blue. A slight breeze blows gently moving the sacred pages.

In Karachi I was sleeping in the room of Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri. In my diary I wrote more passionate and emotional words:

"How can I sleep when I am in this room? Sleep is minimal. All I can think about is him. He is spiritually present with me. So much noise from the surrounding lanes and alleyways! All night long. And as soon as the azan for Fajr Namaz is called the streets are filled with the loud sounds of vendors' calls! Haji Saheb lay on this bed listening to these sounds. But apparently he also slept little. His nights were filled with the zikr of the Name Allāh. Why has Allāh brought me here? What am I doing in his room using his 1000 bead tasbih? The same tasbih he wore on the video recordings! What is the purpose of this? It goes far deeper than writing a book about him. I know that for certain. Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri, what is my connection to you? Tomorrow I will come to you, to your Mazar. You know I am coming. You will be waiting for me."

Inexpressible sadness. Bereft and lost. I sit beside his Mazar, the simple white marble slab I had seen in the dream of the previous year. The tears flow. They will not stop. Tears become sobs. Finally I am at his side, all the way from Australia. I hear Mehmood's voice behind me, "Oh! So many tears! So many tears!" He too is extremely upset.

The sadness comes back to me, the despair that I experienced in 1995 when I learned that he had passed away. Too late! Never to be! Not in this realm, anyway. I kiss his Mazar and rub my tasbih over the white marble. Dervish Mehmood hands me a cup of hot sweet tea and with utter simplicity softly says, "Haji Saheb has invited us to tea!"

The passing away of such a great Pakistani qawwal was a momentous event in the history of Eastern music. Qawwali would never be the same without him. Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri passed away on the 5th April in 1994. A close family member told me he died of a heart attack. To my question, "Did he suffer?" she had replied, "No my dear! He didn't suffer. It was very quick. Oh! If we could all die like he did. It was beautiful, just beautiful."

On that fateful day in 1994 the streets and lanes and alleyways of Liaquatabad had been packed tightly with mourners for his Funeral prayers. Many said, ‘The Noor, (the Divine Light) has now left Liaquatabad!’ Mehmood gave me his account of what was for him a devastating experience.

“We were going to England the next day,” related Mehmood. “I was with Haji Saheb. I had dinner with him. We were talking about the tour. Then Haji Saheb said to me, ‘Mehmood, you had better go home to sleep. You look tired. We have a big day tomorrow.’ So I said ‘Assalamu alaikoum Allāh Hafiz’ and went home. Early the next morning there was someone banging on my door, before Fajr Namaz. They banged and banged and I said to go away. Then I heard my nephew’s voice. I opened the door and he said, ‘Uncle Mehmood! Haji Saheb is dead!’ My God! Oh no! Haji Saheb. Dead? Oh! Amatullah! I had been sitting with him just a few hours ago. Haji Saheb! Haji Saheb! Haji Saheb!”

He passed away only weeks after returning from Umra with Haji Maqbool. Mehmood further related, “When I heard that my brothers were home from Umra I rushed around to Haji Saheb’s home to greet him. He was praying. I went into the room. Oh! There was Haji Saheb. He looked so beautiful. He was growing a beard. I had never seen him with a beard before! He was standing there praying, saying ‘Allāhu Akbar’. I looked at him and oh! Amatullah! I remembered a statue of Sayyiduna ‘Isa that I had seen in Spain. And I thought, ‘Haji Saheb is like Sayyiduna ‘Isa!’ He looked so beautiful. Amatullah, you must put this in your book!”

He had passed away in a car that was taking him to the hospital, beside him his beloved brother Haji Maqbool. Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri, the man who could transport an audience to spiritual heights when saying the Sacred Name Allāh! Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri exhaled his departing breath, a breath that would transport his own spirit to the other side!

On the 20th February 1998 the Sabri household awakens early to prepare for this most important day. It is the 23rd Shawwal, 1418, marking the fourth anniversary of the passing away of Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri. I can hardly believe that I am present in Pakistan, in Karachi, in the Sabri home itself, for this blessed occasion! The ceremonies are due to commence in late afternoon but first the home must be scrubbed and polished and made to shine. It is Friday. I look for a special place to say my prayers. Having chosen a spot to spread my prayer mat I am told by one of Haji Saheb’s daughters, “This is where my father used to pray!” After praying I say my zikr on his 1000 bead tasbih.

Throughout the ceremonies of the late afternoon and night I am the honoured guest, come all the way from Australia for the fourth anniversary. Ladies gather in one room and men in another for silent recitation of the Holy Qur’an. And, it is here in Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri’s home that I have my first live experience of qawwali – not Sabri qawwali though, another group of qawwals. And it is here that I begin to learn the adab, the spiritual courtesy of attending a qawwali mehfil. Mehmood guides me through that initial experience. Coming to me as I sit near the musicians he puts several bank notes in my hand, leads me forwards and together we give the offering, nazrana to the qawwals. He then circles my head with more notes letting them flutter down upon the heads of the qawwals. Spiritualized money. Blessed for the one who gives, the one over whom it is circled and for the ones who receive.

As soon as the qawwali concludes crowds of us move off in a convoy of vehicles to the cemetery, the Paposh Qabristan, in nearby Nazimabad. Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri's grave is situated near his father's grave in a peaceful courtyard. In the center of the courtyard is the Mazar of Herat Shah Warsi with its distinctive yellow walls and chadars. Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri had been initiated into the Warsiyya Tariqa by Herat Shah Warsi's khalifa, Amber Shah Warsi. Photos of the initiation ceremony adorn the walls of the Sabri home. The initiation ceremony differs from other tariqas in that instead of the usual oath of allegiance (bai'at) at the hand of the Murshid the initiate is clothed in an unstitched brilliant saffron garment known as ihram. The name bestowed upon Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri within the Warsiyya Tariqa was Alam Shah Warsi. Both of his names are engraved upon the white marble of his grave. The Warsiyya Silsila is a branch of Chishti.

As evening descends we gather for more qawwali around the Mazar of Herat Shah Warsi. The women are segregated in an enclosure at the back but through Divine Grace I am invited to join the men. Firstly, chadars are placed upon the Warsi Mazar, and then, many chadars of varying colours, glittering, shining with sequins and satin are spread respectfully over the humble white marble Mazar of Haji Saheb. As fate would have it, the place where Haji Saheb now lies buried, to the side of the Warsi Mazar, was once his favourite position for singing qawwali.

I am enchanted, enthralled, enraptured by this spiritual spectacle. Amongst the gathering are beautiful men of the Warsiyya Silsila with saffron robes wrapped around their lean brown bodies and long flowing locks streaming over their shoulders. Each one of these Warsi faqirs emanates a subtle luminosity. Incredibly gentle people are the Warsiyya!

The qawwali continues with new groups arriving, performing and then making way for the next group. To complete my intoxicating experience a golden chadar is removed from Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri's Mazar carried across the courtyard to where I am sitting then draped around my shoulders!

"Roses shine in the clay beside your tomb.

Be aware earth, who sleeps inside you."

(Mevlana Jalaluddin Rumi) *

The night grows old and the mehfil concludes and we return to Liaquatabad for the blessed meal. Mehmood reappears wanting to take me to his own qawwali mehfil with his own Pir-O-Murshid. I am up and ready. "Chalo! Lets go!" Together we walk to a rickshaw and then splutter off into the night to "Babaji's" astana.

I first became aware of Mehmood's Pir-O-Murshid in 1997 when I saw him on an amateur video recording sent to me by Mehmood immediately after our initial phone conversation. I was perplexed trying to fathom what this videotape was all about. It documented Mehmood's Murshid and his many murids on an excursion to a river on the outskirts of Karachi and the subsequent mehfil in a nearby home.

This was my first glimpse of Baba 'Abdul Razzaq Raza Shakoori Malangi Chishti, lovingly called Babaji. Just one glimpse, yet, without my awareness something profound was triggered off in the depths of my heart.

Babaji, dressed in a bright rich green kurta, swam in the waters of a wide river. It was as though he belonged in this liquid environment, so natural was his frolicking, so radiant his smile. Pure joy radiated from his brown face with his thick grey hair, dripping-wet. Rolling and somersaulting in the rippling water, diving deep here to reappear over there! Many of his male murids joined Babaji in the river. The women remained on the dry land, though some I noticed did dangle their feet into the shallow waters at the edge. Faces at that time unknown and now so familiar! In the background the unmistakable sounds of qawwali played incessantly as these spiritual companions shared the pleasure of cool waters enveloping their bodies.

The video then documented an intimate traditional Sufi mehfil in which Babaji, sitting in the place of honour and respect, was surrounded by devoted male murids. The women gathered nearby screened behind a curtain. This was the first time I ever heard Mehmood singing solo, without his elder brothers. This was not Mehmood Ghaznavi Sabri, the youngest of the Sabri Brothers, sitting on the sidelines of the mehfil! This was Mehmood "Majnun" (as Babaji named him) as lead qawwal singing with his Pir brothers for the sheer pleasure of their beloved Babaji! This qawwali was distinctly different to that of the Sabri Brothers. The poetry was Babaji's. I watched. I listened. Another firm tug on the thread! An unfolding had just begun.

Six months later soon after my arrival in Karachi Mehmood took me to meet his Pir-O-Murshid. Babaji's astana was deep inside the twisting and intricate network of narrow alleyways of Osmania Colony.

Following Mehmood along the weaving passages we pass curtained doorways screening darkened interiors of small homes. Grubby smiling faces of tiny children greet us at every corner. Wide innocent eyes filled with wonder at the rare spectacle of a "gori", white lady, visiting their neighbourhood. Stepping over open drains and rubbish, the occasional tethered goat bleating, high-pitched voices and deep murmurs as we go deeper inside the maze. Reaching a heavy embossed curtain with sandals and slippers scattered on the floor beneath Mehmood and I slip off our shoes and enter the humble astana of the faqir, Baba 'Abdul Razzaq Raza Shakoori Malangi Chishti. Joining several brothers who lounge easily on the floor of the first tiny room, Mehmood introduces me. Two women wearing green chadars greet us warmly and bring sweet hot chai. Shafts of soft sunlight filter through a portion of open ceiling.

The place is tiny, no more than ten feet by ten feet, yet there is space for us to sit comfortably. Words are spoken in low tones. Mehmood's mood is delightful here with his Pir brothers and sisters in the astana of his Babaji. His deep constrained laughter actually seems to emphasize the tranquility of this spiritual space, hidden away as it is in the centre of a labyrinth. Visitors with veiled faces appear through the curtain and pass quickly into the darkened room beyond.

Mehmood is waiting for the moment to take me inside to meet Babaji. Eventually the women concealed under heavy black burqas leave the inner room. From his relaxed position on a pile of green cushions Mehmood peeps around the corner into the interior. Now Babaji is alone. “Come on Amatullah!”

Within the dark room Babaji reclines on the floor on a piece of matting. He smiles radiantly as Mehmood, his “Majnun” rushes to his feet, kneels, bows low to place his lips upon the extended hand covered with gem-studded rings. Softly spoken words pass between Murshid and his qawwal khalifa. I am presented to Babaji. The connection is made. Hands touch. Eyes meet. Heart speaks to heart.

In bright green kurta with dozens of bangles and bracelets glistening on his right forearm Babaji utters gentle phrases in English. His hair is grey but the clarity and smoothness of his brown skin make it impossible to even guess at his age. More tea is brought to us, and sweets. Babaji places one large piece of sweetmeat directly in my mouth. Mehmood whispers, “You are very lucky Amatullah!” This is a great blessing indeed. Bahut barkat.

The walls are literally covered with photographs of sanctified men and sacred places. Two faces dominate: an old man with long white beard and piercing gaze, his frail body lightly covered with a thin cloth, and an incredibly gentle bearded man whose liquid eyes are focused on another dimension, another realm of existence, with his large tasbih in his hand. I was later to learn that these blessed human beings were Babaji’s Murshids, Qazi Baba of Sukkur and Shakoor Malang Baba of Peshawar.

Babaji the faqir is a true Murshid. In a world inhabited by numerous spiritual frauds and fakes masquerading as men of exalted states and stations, Babaji is real and true. Babaji is immersed in love of the Holy Prophet Muhammad. His ecstatic poetry bears witness to his adoration. Babaji is always giving, giving and giving more. No one leaves Babaji’s astana empty hearted or empty-handed. On this my first visit Babaji hands me several bank notes. Blessed money. Tabaruk! I had never before encountered such a thing. Prior to this in other places the murids had been the ones to give to the Murshid. But, things were reversed here in the astana of Baba ‘Abdul Razzaq Raza Shakoori Malangi Chishti.

Since that time I have encountered many people of the Sufi Path who exclaim “If he asks for money he is not a true Murshid. O! No!” Having learned through bitter experience about the zigzag ways of the pseudo-Shaykhs these wise people gave me clear warnings.

Mehmood and I prolong our time in his presence, basking in Babaji’s light, soaking up the blessing. Murids come and go attending to Babaji’s needs whilst new visitors enter seeking his du’as and blessings and the power of his breath to cure their various ailments and relieve the problems of life.

The sun descends. The Azan for Maghreb prayer is called. We all disperse to offer our prayers. Babaji, the 'ashiq-e Rasul, remains in his humble abode of tranquility immersed in the perpetual Remembrance of Allāh and contemplation of His Beloved.

I had come to Pakistan to undertake intensive research into the art of Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri, yet I did not actively go out seeking information and gathering material. My so-called research programme was utterly passive. I simply let each day take care of itself. No direction. Just wait and see what happens. Maybe this has something to do with the very atmosphere of the Subcontinent. When I recently read Peter Lamborn Wilson's essay "Chishti Reminiscence" I was amused because he too never took any notes. This is understandable though, as his was a 60's hippie journey. Quite different from mine! I soon learned that there is no point in planning anything in Pakistan. Whatever one plans never seems to eventuate so it is best to remain open and receptive and flow along, just as the great thirteenth century Egyptian Sufi Saint, Ibn Ata'illah says in his Hikam, "When the forgetful man gets up in the morning, he reflects on what he is going to do, whereas the intelligent man sees what Allāh is doing with him."

Scattered fragments of old memories and recollections filtered to me from the various people I encountered. One man related how he had been present at a very significant Sabri Brothers' mehfil. "It was a case of the chicken and the egg," he said. "Ambar Shah Warsi and Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri. I saw them at a mehfil when Haji Saheb was singing Ya Muhammad Nur-i-Mujassam. Ambar Shah Warsi was an elder of Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri in the Warsiyya Silsila. As Ambar Shah Warsi was being rained with Nur (Divine Light) he kept passing it on to his junior Haji Saheb." This transmission of Divine Inspiration was what I would love to have witnessed.

Another gentleman expressed his admiration for the great qawwal. "When Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri says 'Allāh' the Name comes right from inside him. He has to let out that Name. He cannot keep it inside. No one else can say it like he did!"

"He was a holy man."

"He was a saint."

"Haji Saheb was something. I cannot say what his spiritual status was but he was high."

"He was a qalandar!"

When people would come to him asking for his du'as and for tawiz and he would say, "Why do you come to me? Why me? I am just a man. It is Allāh. Allāh!"

I was told that in his youth Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri had wanted to turn from the world and go into the wilderness, exclaiming, "What do I want with the things of this world. I want only Allāh!" His mother's stern rebuke turned him back to his responsibilities. And by far the greatest responsibility given to him was to spread the Message of Divine Love throughout the world.

A story started circulated through certain quarters of Karachi, and maybe even further afield, that I had embraced Islam after hearing the Sabri Brothers. I don't know where the story originated but perhaps this is how history gets distorted – fiction becomes accepted as fact. Myth, fable and legend are acknowledged as truth. I embraced Islam in 1984. My first book And the Sky Is Not The Limit related the whole story. I first heard Sabri Brothers in 1994. However, and this is the crucial point, my experience of Sabri Brothers took me far deeper into Islam than did the initial step ten years earlier. Embracing Islam had been sweet and refreshing. The impact of the sama’ of Sabri Brothers had set fire to my heart. Those ten intervening years had been preparing me for the moment, the stirring of the hidden memory of the pre-Eternal day of Alast when Allāh Almighty had asked each and every one of us, “Alastu birabbikum?” (Am I not your Lord?).

Before leaving Pakistan with the Sabri Brothers to accompany them on their 1998 tour of Australia I had one vitally important ziyarat to make - to the Mazar of Hazrat ‘Abdullah Shah Ghazi, affectionately called Ghazi Baba. It was his Mazar I had seen in the decisive dream years earlier, the place from where this beautiful spiritual connection started to unfold.

Hazrat ‘Abdullah Shah Ghazi was born in 98 AH in the blessed city of Madina in Arabia. Due to the political upheaval of the times his respected father Syed Muhammad Nafs Zakia sent him to Sindh in 138 AD to spread the message of Islam. During his twelve years in Sindh many people heard his call and entered Islam, therefore Sindh is the place from where Islam spread throughout the entire Subcontinent. Political turmoil raged in Madina and Basra with many intrigues, arrests and murders. ‘Abdullah Shah’s father was murdered in Madina in 145 AH and there was an order to arrest ‘Abdullah Shah in Sindh. In the ensuing conflict ‘Abdullah Shah Ghazi was martyred in 151 AH. His companions fled with his body to a village by the sea and buried him on a tall hill.

Hazrat ‘Abdullah Shah Ghazi’s miracle is the fountain of sweet cold water that flows in abundance from a spring at the foot of the hill upon which stands his Mazar. It is said that after his murids buried Hazrat ‘Abdullah Shah they wanted to live close to him but were troubled by the lack of pure water. They prayed to Allāh and during the night ‘Hazrat came to one of them in a dream to inform them of the well of sweet water at the foot of the hill. To this day people flock to the Miracle Fountain, Chashma-i-Karamat to drink the water for spiritual blessings and the cure of various ailments.

On the other side of Karachi, high on a cliff top is the Mazar, overlooking the sea on one side and the city on the other. Architecturally quite strange with its grey and white zigzag striped exterior yet spiritually profound! Bathed once again in the intoxicating fragrance of the humble red rose garlands in my arms I climb the long steep flight of stairs. Salaams and litanies and recitations and du'as to the Saint, then garlands are laid across the Mazar piled high with many chadars. I descend and follow the path around to the lower side of the cliff where there is a spring of miraculous water. Of this I drink.

I must now find the exact place of that Sabri Brothers' 1986 video, the place I had seen in my dream. In my dream I had passed through a door but that door had not been visible in the video, so I wondered whether there really was a door there or not. I am intensely excited about this door. Is it there or isn't it?

The traditional location for qawwali mehfilis is just near to the spring and at the time of Urs is tightly packed with crowds of devotees and lovers. I walk on the bare earth through this space, now empty and silent except for the flapping of wings as stray chickens run away squawking at my intrusion. One or two urchins follow close on my heels, asking for money.

At the end is the platform upon which the Sabri Brothers had played their qawwali. And there, just to the side, now clearly visible, is ...the door. Yes! There is a door and splashed across its surface in rough Urdu script is the word Malang. Malang, the one who is drowned, lost, annihilated in his love of Allāh.

I had come full circle, back to 'Abdullah Shah Ghazi Baba.

*High upon the cliff top: the Mazar.
Green flags fluttering in the breeze.
Welcoming. Joyous. Sanctuary.
Haven for the poor, the heartbroken and sick.
How many times I have climbed that long steep flight of stairs leading to your door!
Seeking tranquility. Direction. Protection.
Ya 'Abdullah Shah Ghazi Baba!
Showering Karachi and her inhabitants with blessings and love!*

I flew to Australia with the Sabri Brothers. Strange that I should experience their first live concert in Australia. During my two weeks in Karachi I had merely sat-in on their low-key practice sessions. I wondered what they would be like without Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri.

An earlier diary entry: "It was Haji Saheb who attracted the angelic presences. He was the empty vessel through whom the Divine Light had poured forth into the earthly realm. I believe Haji Saheb was not only a qawwal. He was a waliullah and a qawwal. He was a great qawwal because he was a waliullah! He radiated light and love. It was his spiritual reality that injected his every breath, his every word, his every silence, his every glance, his every expression with so much beauty and power. No one can utter the Name Allāh as he did! He could not hold the power of the Name inside. He could not contain it. It would build up energy and he had no alternative but to exhale that one, glorious, intoxicatingly beautiful breath carrying the most sacred Name. And upon that breath the blessed receptive hearer would ascend! His voice released the most intense yearning, the most unbearably painful beauty and the most sublime rapture. He would drown. We would watch him drown. And we would drown with him!!”

Their first concert was at the Perth Festival. The Sabri Brothers were still great. Undoubtedly. But there was an empty space, a silence where Haji Saheb should have been. I waited expectantly to hear his voice, his breath. It could still be heard – within the depths of my heart! Yet, Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri was still there with his brothers. The space that he left behind him became an entity in itself. I felt that the power of his physical absence actually made his spiritual presence stronger.

One night we stood on a terrace of the Sydney Opera House, overlooking one of the most spectacular harbours in the world. City lights and stars reflected and twinkling on the calm waters. They had just given a stirring performance, enchanting Pakistanis and Australians, Muslims and non-Muslims alike. There certainly was magic still within the Sabri Brothers! The Australian audiences loved them. I quickly perceived an immense energy hidden within Haji Maqbool Ahmed Sabri, the Maestro of classical qawwali, engulfed in celestial sounds. Qawwali was his spiritual food. His audience was also his food. There was a powerful two-way communication, back and forth between Sabri Saheb and his admirers.

Mehmood Ghaznavi Sabri, the youngest brother now second qawwal, sat quietly at the sidelines, observing perfect adab, courtesy towards his elder brother who was also his ustad, his teacher. He was sitting quietly and waiting for the moment to emerge from the shadow and stand alone as a qawwal with a divinely inspired voice.

My link with Haji Kamal became very strong at this time. He had developed a severe case of double pneumonia and remained hospitalized in Adelaide for two weeks. When the tour was over, along with the expiry date of their visas, the Sabris returned to Karachi leaving Kamal Saheb to recuperate under the care of Australian doctors and nurses. I went to my home in Brisbane, phoning daily to the Adelaide hospital to check on his progress. Leaving my bag packed I hurriedly made arrangements to return almost immediately to Pakistan. Then bidding farewell I boarded the plane and met up with Kamal Saheb at Singapore Airport and together we travelled to Karachi.

It was a decisive flight taking me away from the familiarity of my former life to the wonder of unknown places to enter an amazing dance of destiny whose melody enchants and whose choreography enraptures. And, even if I wanted to stop dancing and leave the dance floor, I don't think I could now! The music lingers on and... the voice...!

This music will never fade nor the dance wind down till the end of Eternity, for what we desire is infinite.

*The lover whispers,
“As I opened my eyes*

*I saw your face;
I heard your voice
as I listened.”*

(Fahkrudin ‘Iraqi) **

I had been swept away on a great wave of celestial music notes on the Ocean of ‘ishq, a wave that would carry me back to the Land of the Sufi Saints, where Baba Farid-ud-Din Ganj-i Shakar had conveyed the message, “Amatullah may leave but I will keep her heart with me here in Pakistan!”

7. “I will keep her heart with me...!”

I celebrated my first Eid al-Azha in a Muslim majority country. It was a powerful experience, so different from the unassuming and low-key festivals in Brisbane with its minimal Muslim community. For several days before the Day of Arafat the streets of Karachi were filled with herds of goats and sheep, cattle and camels, waiting to be purchased and slaughtered for the qurbani. These decoratively garlanded animals were tethered in lanes and alleyways outside homes until the time of the sacrifice. An extremely sobering sight!

I was staying in the home of a friend and one of her sons performed the slaughter. Over-sensitive I was unable to watch. “It will prepare you for the jihad!” I was told. “I will engage in the jihad against the nafs instead, thank you!” I remained in my room until those blessed yet painful moments of sacrifice were over. In my past I had witnessed the deaths of so many of my loved animals. Still I could not bring myself to watch this qurbani. Two years later when a butcher sacrificed my own goat for me in Karachi I forced myself to watch the cut of the knife and the death agony. But I was not yet ready this particular year. A heavy silence hung over the streets of Karachi, heavy with the meaning of the sacrifice.

Throughout the three days of Eid there was fighting in Liaquatabad where the Sabris lived. Mehmood phoned. "Listen Amatullah! Can you hear the gunfire?" The tiny lanes and alleyways were totally unsafe forcing everyone to stay indoors. Bullets even penetrated the walls of an upstairs room in Mehmood's home. Political violence. Fighting over the skins of sacrificial animals. Opposing political factions fought, shot and killed their brother Muslims in order to win their rightful skins! And here in the midst of this madness live the Sabri Brothers, men of Allāh who had devoted their lives to spreading the beautiful message of Peace and Divine Love to humanity.

Today, six years later, as I write these words there has been more violence. Three people were killed in nearby Jamshed Road. Shops are heavily shuttered and streets empty of rickshaws, buses and cars. Vehicles have been set on fire. Thick black noxious smoke billows into the atmosphere. Shattered glass is strewn everywhere from the rioting crowd. I cannot venture outside till tomorrow. And here, in the midst of this continuing hostility, we live!

I attended many mehfiles with the group, meeting Sufi Shaykhs and their murids. This side of the Sabri Brothers' life was utterly different to the glamour of international tours and performances in prestigious concert halls throughout the world. Here in Pakistan they usually played their qawwali in its traditional setting at the khanqahs and Mazars for the spiritual uplifting of the devotees. This was where they received the spiritual nourishment that enabled them to take the message outside of Pakistan for others to imbibe! Khanqah and concert hall, both aspects of their artistic-creative-spiritual life are vitally important, both aimed at bringing joy and solace to humanity, everywhere.

It was nearing the Month of Muharram. Time to go to the Urs of Baba Fariduddin Ganj-i Shakar. Before dawn we boarded the train at Karachi's Cantt Station for the long journey to Sahiwal the railway station closest to Pakpattan Sharif. This was my first of many physically uncomfortable spiritually exhilarating journeys with the group. It was like a dream come true for me, travelling with the famous Sabri Brothers, sharing their lives, their experiences.

We had been at a mehfil the previous night so none of us had slept. As soon as the train pulled out of Karachi we climbed into our designated bunks and within minutes all were sleeping soundly - except me trapped on the bottom bunk. In economy class carriages there are three bunks in a space that ideally should have only two. So, space is minimal. One cannot sit on ones bunk. One just has to lie flat whether one is sleepy or not! Now however, as a seasoned Pakistani train traveller I can easily fall asleep on a bunk or on the floor or sitting up or just about anywhere.

The journey continued. I managed to sleep, a little. Some members of the group stirred, woke, played cards. We drank chai and ate biscuits. Sleep again. All the while the train wheels beating out their rhythmic message on the steel tracks like a zikr, "Allāh Hu, Allāh Hu, Allāh Hu” or the beats of a tabla, “dah dah dah tin dah tiriki tiriki dah dah dah tin dah”.

We reached Sahiwal railway station at about midnight. Carrying our bags to a nearby cluster of roadside hotels we settled on charpoys to wait for the dawn bus to take us to Pakpattan Sharif. Dishes of steaming food and rounds of roti were distributed and copious cups of chai. These hotels under the enormous shady tree at Sahiwal station are very special for me. Each year we relax there on our way to and from the Urs, the shady tree being witness to moments of immense spiritual significance in my life. And each year I give salaams to that tree!

Our bus pulled out of Sahiwal just as the Azan was being called for Dawn prayer. We travelled for about half an hour and as we approached the blessed town of Pakpattan Sharif all the devotees on the bus started the chant, “Haq Farid! Ya Farid! Haq Farid! Baba Farid!”

An Urs celebration is an amazing phenomenon. A multitude of lovers and devotees gather, each reciting sacred verses for the Saint at his Mazar. Thousands of chadars, an abundance of flowers and sweets are placed upon the Mazar each day. The Mazar and courtyard are filled with the fragrance of love and devotion. So much love is poured upon the Saint during the days of Urs. And the Saint reciprocates, he is bountiful and he bestows more and more favours on his people, sending faizan, inspiration and love to his lovers. The Saint is in a munificent mood. This day is the anniversary of his union with his Beloved, his return to the Source. The Saint is very generous and loving. A friend of mine, an incredibly gentle lady who is a descendant of Shaykh Baha’uddin Zakariyya of Multan, expressed it very sweetly. “Baba Farid is very kind!” Absolutely.

Qawwals from all over Pakistan and India flock to the Urs of Baba Fariduddin Ganj-i Shakar. During the first few days of Muharram Pakpattan Sharif reverberates with the rhythms of qawwali. At night the Mazar is decked out in bright flashing coloured lights, strung like pearls around the dome. Urs is a wedding festival, celebrating the moment when the Saint is finally united with his Beloved, so the Mazar is beautifully adorned like a bride. From evening prayer through till dawn prayer the qawwals sing for Baba Saheb directly facing the shining silver doors of his Mazar. A constant stream of qawwals with harmoniums balanced on shoulders, flows up the steep laneway to the Darbar. New qawwali groups come in the hope of getting a chance to play, waiting to be discovered and soar to fame like the Sabri Brothers or Nusrat Fateh Ali Khan!

We are accommodated in a home at the foot of the hill in an area where most of the qawwals reside. Narrow cobbled lanes with open drains and charming houses with ancient timber doors and iron locks and chains. After a price is agreed upon the local families happily vacate their homes to make way for the visiting qawwals.

Mehmood takes me everywhere on this my first Urs in Pakpattan Sharif. As we mount the long flight of stairs to the Darbar he recalls that we are following exactly the same route that Haji Saheb took on his last Urs. We meet countless friends. Drink endless cups of chai. Wander along the meandering alleys that surround the blessed precincts.

At night I accompany the Sabri Brothers to the Darbar. They surround me so that I too can squeeze through the crowd of ecstatic devotees to sit with them for their performance. Thousands of lovers are present at the mehfil. The Darbar is packed. As Haji Maqbool Ahmed Sabri's name is announced we push our way through. Hurriedly tablas, dholaks and harmoniums are unpacked. I am sitting, huddled tightly behind Anwar the tabla master. Sabri Saheb and Mehmood take their positions and then ... the Kings of Qawwals enchant the devotees with their magic! Unbelievable that I, all the way from Brisbane in Australia, am sitting with them. Encircled by devotees, engulfed in celestial music, with the blessed Mazar of Baba Farid ahead.

Many Sufi Shaykhs and Pir-O-Murshids sit in ceremonial manner. They are spiritually stirred by the music and song. Nazrana is thrown high into the air to flutter down upon the qawwals. Tears flow as the Sabris sing words of Praise for the Holy Prophet. It is said that those who are spiritually mature do not allow the intensity of their ecstasy to become visible. They are the ones who are inwardly intoxicated, outwardly sober. But such people are rare. The Sabris start singing about Baba Farid. There is one Sufi Shaykh overwhelmed with love. And he's not trying to hide any of it! A tiny, thin, frail old man dressed in green, carrying a long cane in his hand. This is Baba Kassim Shah Faridi from South Africa. The green Shaykh gently dances in his ecstasy as the Sabris sing. His dance is subtle and understated even though there is probably a volcano erupting inside him! He dances and circles and twists and spins, somewhat jerkily yet ever so gracefully, up to the silver doors of the Mazar. Then he turns and dances back to the Sabris to shower them with nazrana. Baba Kassim Shah Faridi, lost in the Ocean of 'ishq.

When the Sabri Brother's qawwali is finished I follow Mehmood across the marble courtyard to the silver doors. He kneels and kisses the threshold. I kiss the cool walls. A fine mist of fragrant rose water is sprayed over us as we mingle and weave our way through the crowd to emerge on the distant side of the Darbar. Then outside into the lane we relax for chai in the ancient stall on the hillside.

But Baba Fariduddin Ganj-i Shakar had not called me all the way from Australia only for the qawwali of Sabri Brothers. He had other messages for me too. Baba Saheb sends signs. Of this I am certain.

The atmosphere of the Urs was enchanting. Having come from a clock-oriented society in Australia where appointments, diary entries and time schedules govern the day it was magical to simply wander without direction through the days and nights of the festivities. It was on one such occasion of aimless carefree meandering that Baba Saheb sent me an indication, a message.

As we were climbing the hill beside the Darbar, up past the old chai shop, I had a flashing thought. A fleeting question darted into my mind, hit its target then departed as quickly as it had arrived. "What if? What if? What if I left everything in Australia and came here, to live, permanently?" This country, this town, this Darbar, these people, the Sabri qawwals, this dervish qawwal at my side, the devotees, the Sufi Shaykhs, the simplicity of life, all of this was where I felt utterly at home. “What if? What if?” Never before had such a seemingly crazy notion entered my head. But here in Pakpattan Sharif Baba Saheb was sending me a very clear sign of an imminent and totally unexpected event in my life!

During the Urs I was somehow urged, coaxed and persuaded to deliver a talk at a seminar. On the morning of the seminar I met with a small group of men, scholars and Government officials and devotees. We shared breakfast together. The atmosphere was relaxed and I found it easy to talk, exchanging views and ideas about Tasawwuf and qawwali. I was assured that the seminar would also be equally intimate. So, in an easy mood I returned later in the day to attend the seminar. I was so sure it would be another close gathering. To my dismay the large room was filled with men. A lectern stood, solemn and alone, at one end. A video camera and blindingly bright lights were in place ready to record my every word and gesture. Needless to say I froze. I can’t remember what I said. I think I spoke about transformation of the self. I was transformed into a block of ice, a block of ice that was burning inside with shyness and fear! I fled at the first opportunity muttering under my breath, “Never again will I do this. This is a big lesson. Never again!”

I had forgotten this painful incident until recently when in 2002 I was sitting in the Sultan Bahu Masjid in Johannesburg in South Africa. I then recollected that my first dismal talk had occurred just behind the Mazar of Baba Farid. I had declared “Never again!” Yet, there I was, as the specially invited guest from Pakistan, delivering a talk to the ladies. And amazingly on that particular night the men had actually been barred from the mosque! How did I receive an invitation to visit South Africa? This story must be told because this too was Baba Fariduddin Ganj-i Shakar’s plan! It happened like this:

In 1998 as I had been meandering through the lanes and soaking up the joy of my first Urs, a young man from Pietermaritzburg in South Africa had also been walking in the same alleyways of Pakpattan Sharif searching for Amatullah Armstrong. Having heard that I was at the festivities with the Sabri Brothers he tried desperately to find me. Apparently, years earlier, when he read my first book And The Sky Is Not The Limit he perceived that I was a Chishti at heart. Yet another person knowing I was a Chishti! He had decided that I must come to South Africa to talk with the ladies of the Sufi Path.

But, as hard as he tried in 1998, he did not find me at the Urs. So, feeling a little daunted, he stood within the Mazar Sharif of Baba Fariduddin Ganj-i Shakar and supplicated, “Baba Saheb, you must bring Amatullah Armstrong to me. I cannot find her so you must bring her to me!” Baba Saheb heard his du’a. But the young man had to wait for quite some time.

Four years later in 2002 this same young man was at Baba Saheb’s Urs, and I was also there with the Sabris. And once again he searched for me in the maze of lanes and alleys that surround the Darbar. In the wee small hours of the morning he roamed through the area where the qawwals reside. But I was not to be found by searching!

Then late one night, as the Urs was drawing to a close, two women stopped me as I hurried down through the mass of devotees in the steep alley outside the Darbar. They took me back up the hill to meet a young man who was waiting beside a stall piled high with glittering chadars and packets of pale golden sugar, shakar. “Yes! It’s her!” they exclaimed eagerly. I was very curious and intrigued by their agitation.

This young man with the serious yet sparkling eyes was Shah Irshad Soofie the great grandson of the Sufi Saint Hazrat Soofie Saheb. In South Africa Soofie Saheb’s Mazar overlooks the river that flows through Durban and the pinnacle of its dome is the same pale gold as the sweet shakar in Pakpattan Sharif. Pale gold, the colour of humility.

Irshad told me that when he saw me, the gori (white) malang, hurrying through the bazaar his hair stood on end and he said to himself, “That’s Amatullah!” This was his last night in Pakpattan Sharif and despite all of his searching he had not found me and had given up all hope of doing so. But it was his du’a of four years earlier that had been answered and Baba Saheb had brought us together directly outside the doors to the Darbar. It was a beautiful meeting, a strong connection with a true spiritual brother.

What I am trying to convey here is just an indication, a taste of the sweetness that is to be experienced at the Mazars of the Sufi Saints in the Subcontinent. Things happen at these blessed places. Love. Joy. Abandonment. Spiritual connections. Bliss. And a deep yearning. Maulana Rumi says, “There’s no cure but the taste of what the saints pass round.” ***

*

My last days of my first Urs in Pakpattan Sharif are blurred. I am dreadfully ill. Fever. Delirium. Sleep. Surfacing then back into restless sleep. I miss many prayers. Time means nothing. Azan follows azan and I am unable to move from my bed.

Mehmood and the group are worried about me. I am under their care and protection and they take this responsibility very seriously. Mehmood tells me to pack my things. His qawwal friend will accompany me in the bus to Lahore to recuperate. “And we meet you next week in Jhelum.” “Yes! Yes! Of course Mehmood!”

I am ready in ten minutes. Filling myself with charcoal tablets in the hope that I make it all the way to Lahore without any problem! I feel revolting, so grubby and so sick. It is now drizzling. Mehmood carries my bag. We go to a tiny chai house and climb into the seats at the back.

Subhanallah! The spiritual journey is so profound! Moments of stark awareness. The weakness of the earthly body opens a channel to a state of higher consciousness. Allāh Karim! I am a slave. Yes! Allāh is turning me whichever way He Wills! I sit in the damp atmosphere. I am ill but not fragile. I have strength still. Mud and rain outside in the street. Chai is brought in dirty cups. Mehmood goes and buys a paper bag filled with biscuits. We sit drinking chai, eating biscuits in the damp drizzle of Pakpattan Sharif. The Rahmat of Allāh. Mehmood is talking to someone. Urdu. I am not listening. Just staring ahead. But what is this I am staring at? I am watching the man who makes the chai. He is squatting at the front of the shop and he is washing something. I can’t comprehend what this thing is that he is washing! I stare. He is washing ... the head of a dead sheep in a bowl of water. He is scrapping and scrubbing the head. I am a slave. I am totally aware. Ya Allāh! Rain. Sickness. Mud. The head of a sheep! Dirty cups. And ... dervish Mehmood who rises above it all! "Why you worried? Ever be happy!"

Outside again I climb up into the horse and cart. It is time to bid farewell. My heart is sad. I don't want to leave. I don't want to leave the magic of this place. I don't want to leave the totality of the experience. I don't want to leave this dervish qawwal. But we will join up within a week up north. I don't want to leave Baba Saheb!

"Allāh Hafiz" "Allāh Hafiz!"

The cart pulls away and makes its way down through the winding bumpy streets to the bus that will take me away from the Blessed Urs of Baba Farid in Pakpattan Sharif.

What work had Baba Saheb designated for me after this, my first Urs? What was I required to do? Which obstacle had to be removed from my path? After recovering from my illness I joined Mehmood and some group members in Islamabad for ziyarat and qawwali mehfiles, then an arduous 30-hour train journey back down to Karachi in readiness for my return flight to Australia. The "What if? What if?" was soon to manifest. "What if I left everything in Australia and came here to live permanently?"

My PIA flight departed from Karachi's Jinnah International Airport at six o'clock on a sweltering humid morning in late May 1998. As the plane taxied to the runway I experienced an intense sadness and contraction of heart. Solitary traveller on the mystic path of return to the Source! I was leaving Pakistan, land of the great Sufi Saints. Looking down through the heat haze onto the dusty grayness of the sprawling city beneath I knew I would return soon. But first I had to clear certain things that were blocking my path.

Baba Fariduddin Ganj-i Shakar had sent me away but he was keeping my heart with him in Pakistan.

8. “There’s no cure but the taste of what the saints pass round.”

On the plane journey to Brisbane I reflected upon my months in Pakistan. And I quickly realized that each day of life as a traveller in the Subcontinent had brought with it a growing awareness of a previous inner imbalance. Vital qualities had been absent in my life prior to Pakistan, the quality of compassion, which is the very heart of Islam and that of love, the essence of Tasawwuf. The more contact I had with the Pakistani people the more I came to understand just how meagre had been my compassion and love for Allāh’s humanity throughout the years in my first tariqa in Australia when I had devoted myself almost entirely to zikr and fikr. But, perhaps this is as it should be because Pakistan was destined to be the earthly setting for this particular awareness to unfold.

Pakistan ripped me apart and opened me up to an inflowing and an outpouring. Love flowed to me from so many people. And I reciprocated with a great outpouring of love and compassion for them. Everywhere I went I encountered raw, beautiful, sad, joyful, exultant, desolate, dignified, impoverished humanity. Pakistan changed my entire life. Sufism had to be a dynamic reality. It had to be lived.

Back in Australia after my Pakistani experience, surrounded by comparative opulence and things in excess, I felt like an alien, no longer belonging. Pakistan may have been covered with a blanket of dusty grayness but the richness of her spirituality shone through. Australia, outwardly brilliant and shining, inwardly bereft of mystical wealth. Like a fish on dry land I waited for another great wave from the Ocean to sweep me once again out beyond my depths! I was miserable and homesick. But I was still hanging on to that thread. I was longing to return to Pakistan and her saints and their lovers. “There’s no cure but the taste of what the saints pass round.”

During this period of transition the only solace I could find, the only relief from the mental and spiritual unrest was the qawwali of the Sabri Brothers. My obsession with them had not abated. In reality it had grown even stronger since my departure from Pakistan. And it was this obsession that urged me to make the final break with all my connections in my so-called homeland. The Chishti thread was pulling me back to the land of the great Sufi Saints. Strangely, as Pakistan was drawing me closer everything in Australia seemed to be rejecting me! The prevailing conditions were actually making it unbearable for me to stay. The Divine Plan was really making it easier for me to bid farewell to connections and homeland. There wasn’t anything to hold me there, except my trepidation about actually making the break and perhaps my clinging to old notions of how things should be working out! But, there were “guides and spirits” along the path facilitating and smoothing the way.

Throughout this time of turbulent change I sought guidance and advice from a Pakistani Sufi Shaykh who lived in USA. Via telephone conversations and fax messages this humble and unassuming Shaykh showered me with such loving tenderness and compassion, care and concern. His heart was reaching out to mine as he endeavoured to console me, trying to ease the pain and heal the wounds. I related the details of my dreams and experiences. It was his blessed fax response that finally clarified my position vis-à-vis Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri.

His words refreshed my heart and spirit like purified rain from heaven. “You are on the way of Love and this is superior to all other ways.” He congratulated me “for being selectively accepted and connected with the Silsila Chishtiyya” and confirmed my already firmly held conviction by saying “Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri is your Murshid and he will guide you with his love.” And he added, “Should you need a living Murshid Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri will point your heart in that direction.”

All I had to do was wait for the winds of Fate to blow me back to Pakistan. And for that thread to pull me in!

The golden dome of the Mazar shone with a delicate lustre on the fiery crimson of the sunset horizon as we approached the town of Sehwan Sharif in interior Sindh. It was my destiny to spend the last day of 1998 and the first day of 1999 at the Mazar of Hazrat Lal Shahbaz Qalandar. The seal was set on the direction of my new life in the land of the great Sufi Saints!

My host on this journey was a gentleman devoted to Baba Farid Ganj-i Shakar and Lal Shahbaz Qalandar. Throughout the entire eight-hour long journey from Karachi to Sehwan Sharif he played only one qawwali, repeatedly, over and over again, on the car’s cassette player. It was a very old Sabri Brothers’ recording of a qawwali about the Urs of Baba Saheb in Pakpattan Sharif. I think this endless qawwali reduced the other passengers in the car to a state of exhaustion. But I was high and full of energy. We stopped for lunch in Hyderabad where I was taken to meet a very old man whom I was told was a living Saint. His name was Ghulam Mustafa Khan. Many people were waiting in the antechamber of the large building anxious to have an audience with Khan Saheb. I was the only woman. Khan Saheb greeted me and graciously accepted copies of my books. I had not wanted to give my little books to such a great scholar but my host on this journey had insisted that I must. Ghulam Mustafa Khan humbly presented copies of his own books to me.

We reached Sehwan Sharif at sunset. The only thing I knew about Hazrat Lal Shahbaz Qalandar was that the Sabri Brothers sang about him. Nevertheless my lack of knowledge of the Saint did not deter him from calling me to his presence. When I entered the Mazar my attention immediately fell upon a small old dervish sitting on the bare floor reciting the Holy Qur’an. A green shawl was over his shoulders and a small green turban wrapped around his head. He looked at me. I looked at him. It was electric. After saying Fatihah and making du’a beside the Mazar of Hazrat Lal Shahbaz Qalandar I sat at a distance behind this old dervish hoping to catch some of his barkat, blessing. He knew I was there. Timidly I approached him, sat directly in front of him and asked him to make du'a for me. He did. Was this old dervish one of the thin filaments in the thread!

Someone said, "There is no dervish, or if there is a dervish, that dervish is not there."

Look at a candleflame in bright noon sunlight.

If you put cotton next to it, the cotton will burn.

But its light has become completely mixed with the sun.

(Mevlana Jalaluddin Rumi)

But if you put a stone beside that candleflame nothing will happen. Only dried up cotton or paper will burn!

Hazrat Lal Shahbaz Qalandar was born in 538 AH in Marvand in the district of Tabriz in northern Iran. His mother was a princess and his father a nobleman. At an early age he devoted himself to studying the Holy Qur'an and as he grew his desire to follow the Way of Divine Love fired his poetic genius. Like so many of the great Sufi saints, Lal Shahbaz travelled widely. Three of his eminent spiritual companions were Baba Fariduddin Ganj-i Shakar of Pakpattan Sharif, Hazrat Baha'uddin Zakariyya of Multan and Syed Jalaluddin Bukhari of Uch Sharif. It is said that the four went to Mecca together. (This must have been a journey in the spirit because it is known that Baba Farid never made a physical journey there.) Outside of Sehwan Sharif is a cave named Yak Thumbee in which, it is said Baba Farid and Syed Jalaluddin would visit Lal Shahbaz. And in Uch Sharif is a small cell, hujra, in which the four companions are said to have sat in deep meditation, muraqaba.

There is a lovely story told about Lal Shahbaz's entry into Sehwan Sharif when he was 111 years of age. As he arrived in the town the many saints already living there sent him a cup of milk – indicating that there was no place for him, the town was full to the brim with saints. Lal Shahbaz Qalandar placed a rose on the milk and returned it whence it had come. This was his indication that his presence would add elegance, fragrance and glory to the town. And it did! Lal Shahbaz passed away in Sehwan Sharif in 650 AH at the age of 112.

Whilst I was in Sehwan Sharif, a friend in Karachi, anxious about my whereabouts, was seeking advice from a Shaykh of the Naqshbandiyya Silsila. "Don't worry about her. She is fine in Sehwan Sharif," he reassured. "But when she returns tell her she must go to Pakpattan Sharif because something is waiting for her there!"

For several months after my return to Pakistan I led a gypsy-like existence, sleeping on floors in the homes of various friends, visiting Babaji and other Sufi Shaykhs, attending Sabri mehfiles and generally enjoying myself as we explored Karachi. After the turmoil back in Australia all thoughts of research programmes had faded into the background and I simply flowed along letting each day unfold afresh.

I was continually amazed by the hospitality and generosity of the Pakistani people. Being such famous qawwals the Sabri Brothers were able to move freely across a wide range of social classes. Consequently Mehmood's friends and acquaintances came from every strata of Pakistani society. So it was not unusual for me to spend the day with a member of an Indian Royal Family in fashionable Clifton and the night with a poor family of eleven in a single room in Liaquatabad. Yet in both extreme cases the generosity and hospitality were of the same high degree, whether eating delicate samosas and drinking tea from a samovar or sharing a common plate of rice and drinking from cracked cups.

I have a fond memory of one such visit to an exceedingly poor family. The mother and her many daughters were all lovers of the Sufi saints. They owned nothing. Their room was empty of possessions but filled with Nur, spiritual light. With her white chadar wrapped tightly around her head the mother sang for me, just for me. She sang a song in praise of the Sufi Saints. Her face was only inches in front of me and her tear-filled eyes gazed directly into mine as she was carried away on the waves of her emotion. These people did not complain about their tight circumstances. They were utterly content with the situation into which Allāh had placed them. And together we sat on the floor of their small upstairs room sharing a meal from a single plate, a great feeling of love flowing between us, brought together through our love of the Sufi saints.

But often I craved isolation and a space of my own. Not so easily found in overpopulated Karachi. A diary entry:

“O dear! This Pakistani extended family situation is very difficult for me coming from a Western nuclear family. Whenever I open a book someone is looking over my shoulder to see what I am reading. Whenever I put pen to paper someone is asking what am I writing. Whenever I am sitting quietly someone is asking me what I am thinking! It must be very difficult and stifling for the one with a free spirit and for the one who is by nature introspective and a solitary. There's no room to move, to breath, to contemplate. I find it suffocating – everyone living in such close proximity. It is amazing how so many spiritually inclined people, so many saints and sages have come from this environment! This is a dilemma. No! It is interesting. Maybe the claustrophobic atmosphere of the family makes one stronger. The ability to go inwards is greater because it requires a greater effort to get there. I don't know! There's so much noise and so many distracting influences. And so many babies!”

But it came as a great shock to me to discover that certain people held very poor opinions of qawwals and musicians in general. Qawwals were considered to be “beyond the pale” by many bourgeois Muslims. I was astounded to realize that certain people actually looked down upon them. The very idea of marrying a qawwal was unthinkable, unspeakable! I was amazed and at a loss to understand why these artists whose music and voices could transport others to the spiritual realm should be held in anything but esteem! “Playthings of the élite” was how Mehmood often laughingly described himself and his fellow qawwals. But it is people from every strata of the society that hold this view, not just the bourgeois and the so-called élite. They love the qawwali but don’t want to know about the qawwals.

I am not talking specifically about the Sabri Brothers though in the early days they too had to struggle to survive. They had to devote themselves entirely to their art in order to attain the supreme heights that they were destined to reach. Yet, I did occasionally encounter people who even held negative attitudes towards these wandering “troubadours” of Divine Love, these Ambassadors of Pakistani Culture. My experience of this was first hand.

Hazrat Inayat Khan, the great Sufi Master of India who took the Sufi Message to the West at the beginning of the twentieth century, said, "The more the musician is conscious of his mission in life, the greater service he can render to humanity."

Often I heard the complaint, “Qawwals only think about money!” Surely qawwali is one of the most honourable and noble ways of earning a living – singing the Praises of the Divinity for the spiritual uplifting of humanity. I have been present at numerous qawwali mehfil where the Sabris have been overwhelmed with love. Tears literally pour from Haji Maqbool Ahmed Sabri’s eyes. And Mehmood says that at times he is momentarily “blind”, so powerful is the spiritual state that descends upon him whilst he is singing! Again, in Hazrat Inayat Khan’s words, “When it intoxicates those who hear it how much more must it intoxicate those who play or sing it themselves.”

The message of qawwali is profound. The mission of the qawwal is profound. When qawwali is taken out of its traditional setting of the Mazars, or out of its homelands of the Subcontinent, to be played for non-Western audiences the impact can be astounding. How many hearts have been opened to Islam through Sabri Brothers’ qawwali? How many seeds have they planted within the hearts of their Western non-Muslim audiences, seeds that could sprout at anytime! Who can know what inner yearnings have been set in motion through the power of Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri’s utterance of the Divine Name “ALLĀH”? It is an élitist attitude to criticize qawwals for taking their art out of the traditional setting and placing it before the public. If the Sabri Brothers had remained within the Mazar and mehfil-e sama’ environments, I and so many others would never had tasted this sweetness.

Apparently when Hazrat Nizamuddin Awliya was only twelve years of age it was a qawwal who triggered off his love for his Pir-O-Murshid Baba Farid. He overheard a qawwal named Abu Bakr talking (not even singing) about Baba Farid and his khanqah in Pakpattan Sharif. Immediately Nizamuddin Awliya felt the spiritual connection. The first time I ever heard Baba Farid’s name was in a Sabri Brothers’ qawwali when they sang, “Haq Farid! Ya Farid! Haq Farid! Baba Farid!” I was drawn irresistibly to Baba Fariduddin Ganj-i Shakar and when I reached his threshold I knew I had “Come home!”

The qawwals, coming from the congested areas of Karachi and other cities, where they live with their large families and numerous dependents, work through the long hours of the night and into the morning. Their days become nights and their nights become days. Whenever I visited their extremely humble homes, bereft of everything except a few cups and blankets and of course harmoniums, the qawwals and their families spoke with such love of Allāh and His Messenger, and were devoted to the Sufi Saints. Yet these people need no defence. Simple and gracious people who have shown me the warmest affection and utmost respect. I have always felt totally protected and cared for when travelling with them. And that is really something! I enjoy being in their company more than any other people in Pakistan.

Fortunately I was able to make a visit to Multan, Kathwal and Uch Sharif, but at that point in time I was not fully aware of the immense significance of these places. Besides, the visit was very brief, no time to immerse myself. As yet I haven't had the opportunity to return. Or to put it correctly, I haven't been called back there again. Not yet anyway! I travelled without the Sabris on this journey. So the journey was one of sobriety in the company of restrained people. In Multan I made ziyarat to the imposing Mazar of the great Suhrawardi Shaykh Baha'uddin Zakariyya. Music is forbidden within the precincts of the Darbar but there was one lone qawwal and a tabla player (tabalchi) sitting at the gate. As I approached he started singing Sabri Brothers' most famous qawwali "Tajdar-e Haram". Did I have Sabri Brothers written all over my face or was the qawwal a mind reader? Of course I was thrilled and gave them many bank notes. And of course as I was leaving the Darbar they instantly started singing it again in the hope of more bank notes, which I gave readily, of course.

Shaykh Baha'uddin Zakariyya was born in Multan in 578 AH (1182 AD). He was a descendant of the Meccan tribe of Quraysh to which the Holy Prophet Muhammad belonged. He was a man of immense spirituality. Whilst returning overland from his pilgrimage to Mecca, he met Shihabuddin Suhrawardi in Baghdad and was initiated into the Suhrawardiyya Silsila. Baha'uddin Zakariyya was an extremely wealthy and opulent man. In Multan he lived a sumptuous and lavish life like that of a nobleman. This was in complete contrast to the austerity and simplicity of the faqirs and dervishes of the Chishti Silsila. Baba Fariduddin Ganj-i Shakar lived only a few hundred miles away in Pakpattan Sharif. At the khanqah in Multan separate accommodation was provided for each disciple whilst in Baba Farid's khanqah in Pakpattan Sharif all dervishes lived, prayed and slept together on the floor of a large hall. Baba Farid's kitchen was open for everyone. Baha'uddin Zakariyya's was not. Baba Farid was accessible till midnight for all visitors who flocked to his khanqah whereas in Multan the Shaykh's doors opened only for appointments. Baba Farid refused personal gifts and positions from the Sultan. Baha'uddin Zakariyya accepted gifts and was appointed the official post of Shaykh-al-Islam. Yet Nizamuddin Awliya always referred to his Pir-O-Murshid, Baba Farid, as Shaykh-al-Islam! Perhaps much of Baha'uddin Zakariyya renown was because of one of his murids, the great ecstatic poet Fahkruddin ‘Iraqi, who was part of his khanqah for twenty-five years.

I then visited a Mazar around which there is much controversy. Some say it is the Mazar of Shams Tabrizi, the ecstatic dervish who opened the spiritual realities for Mevlana Jalaluddin Rumi. Others say it is a makam of Shams Tabrizi, a place that he once stopped on his travels. Yet others say it is another Shams Tabrizi altogether and that was my belief at that time. People of the Mevlevi Silsila, and they are the ones who would know, say it is a makam of the real Shams Tabrizi. How different my ziyarat would have been had I known this at the time! It is a tranquil blue and white Mazar under shady trees.

I visited Kathwal, the town in which Baba Fariduddin Ganj-i Shakar was born. There I made ziyarat to his father’s Mazar beside the mosque where it is said Baba Saheb was given that single pomegranate seed containing immense spiritual illumination.

Ucch Sharif is stunningly beautiful. An ancient city of impressive architecture situated beside a fertile valley of palms and lush gardens. The buildings, now in ruins, still emanate a scent of grandeur, with remnants of blue and white decorative tiles shining in the sunlight on the disintegrating domes and walls. Yet, for all the decay Ucch Sharif is enchantingly beautiful and romantic and spiritually profound. As soon as I alighted from the car a malang attached himself to our small group, offering to guide us. This gentle malang told me that he had been stationed at Data Saheb’s Mazar in Lahore but had recently moved to Ucch Sharif to partake of the spiritual blessings. Ucch Sharif is where Baba Farid undertook his torturous inverted chilla, hanging upside, for forty days, suspended by the feet, in a well. I was taken to a well which was said to be that well. And I was taken into a small hujra, a cell, in which it is said Baba Farid and Lal Shahbaz Qalandar and Baha’uddin Zakariyya and Syed Jalaluddin Bukhari used to sit in deep contemplation. The hujra was in great need of repair and restoration, so one of the gentlemen in our party arranged for its continuing maintenance.

Before departing from Ucch Sharif I made ziyarat to the Mazar of Syed Jalaluddin Makhdum Bukhari. He was the head of the Silsila Sadat Karam. He received khilafat from his ancestors, the Imams of the family of the Holy Prophet. And he received a robe of khilafat from Sheikh Ruknuddin Suhrawardi, the grandson of Hazrat Baha’uddin Zakariyya, and he received the robe of khilafat from Khwaja Nasiruddin Chiragh Delhevi, the khalifa of Hazrat Nizamuddin Awliya. It is recorded that Syed Jalaludin received robes of khilafat from as many as one hundred and forty Masheikh of the Sufi Silsilas during his long journeys through the Muslim world.

The entire journey was all-too-brief and I was too fresh at that time. I hope to be called back again one day to Multan and Kathwal and Ucch Sharif. I particularly hope to return to the Makam of Shams Tabrizi!

 Chishti-Mevlevi Connection

The story is told how in Konya, on a cold night, Jalaluddin and Shams were secluded in their cell, immersed in the Ocean of 'ishq, burning in its fire, lost in the depths of Divine Love. On this blessed night in the middle of a Turkish winter they received a gift from the Unseen Realm. It was a flower.

Jalaluddin pushed the flower under the door, to his worried wife who was waiting outside, a reassurance that all was well within the cell. But his wife was perplexed. Where did Jalaluddin get such a rare flower, never before seen in Konya? After much searching in Konya and questioning many merchants she discovered that this delicate bloom grew in the hot land of India.

A gift arriving in Konya from faraway India via the Unseen Realm! A gift from the Chishtis to Mevlana! Did the faqir and lover Baba Fariduddin Ganj-i Shakar send this blossom to the great lover Jalaluddin?

I met a man in Lahore. His only words to me were, "Baba Farid and Rumi are connected. You must go to Konya. Shams is there - everywhere!"

But Shams is everywhere here too!

There is a Chishti-Mevlevi Connection. That is why Mevlana Jalaluddin Rumi's poetry is scattered throughout this book.

Once again it was Muharram, a new year, the time for the Urs of Baba Farid. And once again I travelled north by train with Sabri Brothers. This was my second Urs. There is immense love energy in Pakpattan Sharif at Urs time. Worries and cares and problems fall away as one lives in the moment, in the everpresent now, in the presence of the great lover, Baba Fariduddin Ganj-i Shakar. Nothing matters. There is only the joy of sharing the experience of Urs and extending love to everyone.

The Sabris sing a wonderful qawwali about this Urs. "Oh why do you worry, slave of Farid? All of your difficulties will disappear of their own accord. Just put your forehead on Baba's threshold and say, 'We are the slaves of Sabir and we have come to you!'"

As we wandered in the lanes and up through the bazaar there were salaams from many people and gifts of fragrant itr, steaming hot chai, prayer beads and bracelets. The heart expands. Capture the joy. Hold it within. Then let it pour forth on others. That is Urs! That is Sufism.

As with my first Urs so with this, my experience was a total qawwali experience. Immersed in the fervour of love. Surrounded by loving people. Engulfed in love energy. Pulsating. With moments of sweet repose floating on gentler waves, subdued and tender. Relishing the flowing of the moments.

We drifted along deliciously as we had the previous year. Talking with friends, absorbed in qawwali, enveloped in the fragrance of red roses and open to flashes of great elation. Perhaps the most blissful moments were those spent under the star-filled velvet sky, on the hillside of bare earth, drinking the sweetest chai, engulfed in clouds of tobacco smoke, gazing down into the crowds of devotees entering and departing from the Darbar. Strings and strings of coloured lights blinking upon the walls of stone as the sounds of qawwali soared into the heavens to fall upon Pakpattan Sharif in a shower of joy.

This year I was accommodated in a home whose inner walls were actually the outer walls of the Darbar. Baba Saheb was very close indeed. I merely had to walk along a tiny path, out into the bazaar, take a few steps up the hill and I was within the blessed courtyard in front of the Mazar. Very close to Baba Saheb! One night I had a wonderful dream about Mehmood's Pir-O-Murshid, Baba Abdul Razzaq Raza Shakoori. I considered it a blessed sign from Baba Fariduddin Ganj-i Shakar. And I remembered the words of the Sufi Shaykh in USA, "Should you need a living Murshid Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri will point your heart in that direction."

As we progressed through the days and nights of celebration I perceived an ever-increasing inner agitation, something new and strange and previously unknown. Initially a slight flutter, like the rush of adrenalin, it developed into great surges of yearning. Was this Baba Saheb's faizan? Baba Saheb was sending me signs, of that I was certain. I listened carefully to my heart.

Standing outside the Darbar Mehmood and I were given some blessed leaves to eat, leaves from an ancient tree within the Darbar. The woman, one of Baba Saheb's servants, who had collected the leaves for us, said, "When you eat these leaves whatever du'a you make will be answered!" We ate those leaves and made our du'as.

And so, on the final night of the Urs, the tenth of Muharram, spiritual connections of profound meaning were made directly in front of the shining silver doors of the Mazar. The answer to my du'a! "The heart finds the heart." This was the "something" that was waiting for me in Pakpattan Sharif.

The Saint and his devoted lovers had intoxicated me! "There's no cure but the taste of what the saints pass round." Yet, there is no way of describing the taste of this sweet wine. One has to taste it, directly. There are thousands of lovers tasting this wine, right now. The words in this book merely point the way to the taverns of Love where the wine is poured.

*"From beyond the intellect beautiful Love comes dragging its skirts,
a cup of wine in its hand."*

(Mevlana Jalaluddin Rumi) ***

*

Outside of Pakpattan Sharif, in the countryside, is another Mazar of another Saint. I had one of the most bizarre experiences of my life at this Mazar. We all made the journey in horse drawn carts called tangas. It was late into the night and the ride was deliciously refreshing with the cool breeze and the crystal clear star-filled sky and the clip clop of the horses' hooves on the quiet country road. We were hoping that the Sabris would be able to play their qawwali for the faqir who lived at the Mazar. I was told he was a majzub, one utterly lost in the Ocean of Divine Love under the Divine Attraction. I'd never actually been in the presence of a real majzub though there are many who look like majzubs parading around most Mazars. Who is real and who is not, only Allāh Knows.

The tangas stopped some distance from the Mazar. In the darkness of the countryside we walked the remaining half-kilometre through a small makeshift village of charpoys and chai shops and hotels and sleepy eyed dusty devotees and malangs and dervishes. After our salaams and du'as at the Mazar we inquired about the majzub who was known as Ali Mahi. We were then led to another low building surrounded by trees and charpoys and many people waiting to see Ali Mahi.

Then we heard an indescribable sound. The most extraordinary and unidentifiable noise was coming from within the building where the majzub lived. A totally mysterious scrapping metallic cacophony like I knew not what! The noise would continue for some minutes and then subside. Then it would start up again with added momentum. What is going on in there I thought! Then to add to the weirdness of the situation Mehmood proceeded to hide all of his jewellery, his amber beads and silver bracelet and rings. He put them inside his kurta and then buttoned it up tightly to the neck. "What are you doing?" Apparently this young majzub was known to take whatever caught his eye or his fancy. And Mehmood didn't want to lose his jewellery. I was hoping Ali Mahi wouldn't take a liking to any members of the group or me! That strange metallic scraping, scratching, rasping noise! There were other sounds issuing forth also. Voices raised in joy and happiness. Clapping of hands and song. A man drew close to us as we waited on the charpoys and whispered that yes we can come inside to Ali Mahi.

The majzub, Ali Mahi, was young, perhaps in his early twenties and he was the size of a Japanese sumo wrestler. He had a round face with sparse whiskers and cropped hair. His fat legs, protruding beneath his trousers, were covered with huge sores. Apparently he spent most of his life in a bathtub filled with water, such was his spiritual state. Ali Mahi was sitting on a large low lounge with dozens of people crammed into every available space about him. I glanced around the room but still couldn't discover the source of the metallic clamor. Mehmood checked that his jewellery wasn't visible! Ali Mahi looked at his room full of guests through eyes glazed with the madness of Divine Attraction. He couldn't say any coherent words, just a few grunts and inarticulate sounds. Then he would smile and laugh and the entire group of people would laugh with him.

Then the scraping sound came again! It was coming from another small room, an alcove at the side. The alcove was completely piled high with a mountain of empty tobacco tins with decoratively painted lids. Metal scraped on metal as one of Ali Mahi's followers waded through this mountainous sea of tobacco tins, selecting and choosing several, till he had about eight in his hand. He then took them to the majzub and graciously and with great ceremony placed them before him. The majzub picked up each empty tobacco tin and stared at it in utter bewilderment. It was as though he was gazing at the most precious gem in the world. He turned the tobacco tins over and over in his hands, staring and laughing with the pure joy of an innocent child. He was lost in wonderment, divinely intoxicated and absorbed in the Beloved.

Maqbool Saheb, Mehmood, the group and myself squeezed together into the confined space directly in front of the majzub. It was amazing! They sang a Punjabi song by Khwaja Ghulam Farid called Nagri Wasey Shalla. The word mahi, meaning beloved, is repeated throughout the song. Ali Mahi was delighted. He giggled. He stared at each of us through the widest eyes. He clapped his hands in glee. Maqbool Saheb and Mehmood sang with full strength and fervour, emphasizing the mahi, doing all they could to bring pleasure to the majzub. But Mehmood was careful to keep that big silver bracelet well concealed! Nazrana was circled above the head of Ali Mahi, fluttering and falling upon the qawwals. There was immense energy in the crowded room. Several women started dancing. More nazrana was thrown over the majzub and the Sabris.

When the qawwali was over Ali Mahi returned to his tobacco tins and we departed from his presence to sit in the open air again. The scrapping sound grew louder and louder and then Ali Mahi's laugh could be heard. Mehmood undid his buttons and rolled up his sleeves. His jewellery was safe. But one of the group members had lost his sequined Sindhi topi, cap. It had caught Ali Mahi's eye and he had taken it for his own pleasure to stare at in wonderment! We walked back to the tangas and returned to Pakpattan Sharif.

The following year Mehmood and I rode out there again. But Ali Mahi had passed away months earlier. His Mazar now stood where his home and tobacco tins used to be.

9. Contemplations of a Traveller

* First Summer

My first summer in Karachi! I have found yet another floor on which to live my nomadic existence, the top floor of a once grand now dilapidated house, an old Hindu house, in one of Karachi's older societies. Pigeons have taken up residence in the shambles that was once the kitchen. Now it is totally unusable. Rubble and debris from the broken ceilings lie in heaps throughout the abandoned rooms. Tiny birds dart in and out of the open windows. Lizards scurry up the walls. Dust drifts in on every waft of hot air settling in a mat of brown over the magnificent tiled floors. Only these tiles have retained their former elegance and dignity. All else is ruin and devastation.

At least I can be alone in this place. Everywhere else I have been bothered by the necessity to engage in conversation, my duty as a guest and a courtesy that I cannot fail to observe. I roll out some blankets on the hard tiles, under the ceiling fan. Thank Allāh for that comfort at least. Suitcases in one corner and all necessities close at hand.

Unable to suppress or deny my innate sense of the aesthetic I personalize my space, hanging on the front wall a gift from Mehmood, a green and gold chador from the Mazar of Data Saheb, placing a brass vase from Multan in a picturesque niche, dangling several tasbihs from a nail above my bedroll. These upstairs rooms would make a perfect home if they were renovated. Peace. Seclusion. Outside the window the branches of a tall neem tree form an intricate screen to filter the dazzling light of the midsummer's sun. But what a restoration job it would be! Perhaps this old home, with its garden full of tall trees and rare plants, is doomed to eventual demolition to make way for some hideous new mansion of the worst design.

My spirits are high during the first days. Enthusiastically I sweep and scrub the tiled floor every morning. Wash my clothes in the inadequate cement bathroom. Valiantly try to keep the ever-present dust at bay! I am a regular little householder. The glorious azan from the nearby mosque in Jamshed Road floats through my window five times each day bringing with it an unfathomable peace and sense of eternity. My prayers fill time and space, my zikr becoming perpetual.

Yet, how quickly the physical can disrupt and dislocate the spiritual! The first sign was a small red spot on my cheek. Within days big blisters had appeared on my arms and neck and leg. Angry blisters that when burst simply kept spreading their infection to other parts. I consulted one hakim. His brews and potions alleviated nothing but the weight of my wallet. I consulted a second who assured me that within a week or so it would be clear. And in my ignorance and innocence I believed him whilst passing across another and yet another five hundred rupees note.

The humidity grew more intolerable. The dust blew in on waves of stifling heat. Cloth against skin was unbearable. The blisters grew bigger and bursting reappeared and reappeared and reappeared. Cleansing teas, thorough bathing, pills and ointments.

So I lay, day in and day out, under the ceiling fan, in the privacy of my own prison. How I welcomed the flaming fire of sunset with the azan, now sad and melancholy, heralding the approach of somewhat cooler hours! Endlessly the fan beat its rhythm above me forcing the tears that filled my eyes to roll in streams down my pallid cheeks.

Slowly we advanced into the sauna of summer. Alone in a foreign land, my companion being far distant for a time, I felt utterly sorry for myself. Well, you wanted to be alone. So, why are you crying? Alone indeed!

But, the spiritual has such power it can subdue the physical, if the will to do so is present. Nothing happens for nothing! Patience. The profound word emerged in all its mystery. Patience. Sabr. From the whirr of the fan, from the cracks in the walls and the falling plaster came patience. On the heat haze and in the patterns of scattered clouds passing my cell window was written patience. From the itching of blisters and rolling beads of sweat the necessity for patience. This too will pass.

I turned in totality to zikr, with the tasbih passing through my fingers, the divine words moving on my lips, the reverberations reaching into my heart.

A Sufi Master was once asked, “What does Allāh want from His creation?” He answered, “The condition they are now in!”

Patience and zikr, yes! But still no improvement to the infection that I feared would leave me scarred. Eventually I was released from my upstairs prison, rescued by the loving kindness and sisterhood of the hakim’s young wife, who took me into her home and nursed me back to health with the aid of good old western antibiotics, the first I had ever taken in my entire life.

Hidden under her own prison of burqa and veils she revealed herself as a vivacious and wonderful human being. We shared many hours of secret laughter in the darkness of her small apartment during the heat of day when the streets outside became deserted ovens in which only mad boys roamed!

 *Lovers lose their way in love and become entangled.

On separation from, and union with, the Beloved. The dreadful abysses of contraction. The sublime peaks of expansion. The story of the lover’s existence.

The words of a beautiful Sabri qawwali are addressed to the Beloved:

Now that you have come so far, don't insist on going back.

Now that you are going back, promise you will come again!

This is the painful truth of the lover’s situation. The bliss of union is utterly filled with the pain of expectation of the next separation, which is bound to come, sooner or later. Here, in the realm of duality, the realm of opposites, it is inevitable that expansion is followed by contraction followed by expansion followed by contraction followed by expansion. The beloved comes. The beloved goes. The beloved returns then leaves again. Lovers lose their way in love and become entangled. The theme of all Sufi poetry is overflowing with this truth. The bliss of union is always tinged with the ache of foreboding: “Soon this will end!” Yet, a ray of light always shines into the darkness of the despair of separation: “This too will end!”

*“I can't explain the goings, or the comings. You enter suddenly,
And I am nowhere again.*

Inside the Majesty.”

(Mevlana Jalaluddin Rumi) *

How great was the great lover ‘Iraqi! He learned how to thrive on separation, finding it even more blissful than union: *I want Union with Him. He wants separation from me – So I abandon my desire To His **.*

I call on the Sufi Saints, “Light the lamp of Love in the darkness of my heart. Ya Khwaja Saheb! Ya Baba Saheb! Ya Nizamuddin!”

Why am I so sad, O! Rasulallah?

Why am I so sad?

*When I saw you in a dream we walked in a garden,
So, why am I so sad here in dunya?*

“But when nights are serene, trouble follows!” said one Sufi Master. And, when the nights are troubled, serenity follows, for sure!!! There’s no escaping it!

Surely each of us creates his own world. The power of the human heart is without measure. It projects its contents, be they luminous or turbid, onto the screen of our existence. The outside world reflects our inner world. How often I have realized this!

One glimpse of the Beloved, or a glance from him and the most dismal scene is instantaneously transformed in a place of effulgent beauty. But, when the Beloved has departed and the heart is filled with despair and hopelessness, the most gorgeous garden becomes a prison in which one is shackled and bound.

This dusty lane with scattered rubbish and dirty puddles sends my spirit soaring when the Beloved’s face appears at the corner. But I drag my feet, tripping on pebbles, irritated and annoyed by bits of debris whenever he is distant and does not come.

“When I see Your Face, the stones start spinning!

*You appear; all studying wanders,
I lose my place.”*

(Mevlana Jalaluddin Rumi) *

*

 *The Sweet Surrender

The Surrender. Letting go. Real Islam. Total and Unconditional Surrender to the Will of Allāh. The Ocean of ‘Ishq. Clinging to you amidst the rough waves of this world. Trying to direct. Wanting. Having an ideal. A goal. Yes! We both have the same ideal. We both have the same goal: the other shore across the Infinite Ocean of ‘Ishq. But, I have been clinging to you with my will. I have not surrendered to the Will of Allāh. Struggling to stay afloat, to move forwards through the turbulent waters of dunya. But my clinging is holding me back. And it is surely holding you back too. We keep treading water with the goal up ahead. This is my limited will, not the Limitless Will of Allāh. “Let go!” cries the heart. “Relax! Surrender! Stop clinging to your notion of how you will reach. You simply don’t know! Leave everything to Allāh. Release your clinging grasp. Learn to float freely, allowing the waves to gently carry you from the waters of dunya into the Ocean of ‘Ishq.”

“Bullhe, what can you hope to find when love is totally blind?”

And, as I release my desperate grasping the Hand of Allāh takes us by our hands and brings us to our yearned for goal. No struggling. No self will. Surrendering totally and unconditionally to the Will of Allāh. And ... together, side-by-side, we arrive.

*

 *Solitary Traveller on the Mystic Path: The Experience

As the train travelled through the desert of Sindh, between Hyderabad and Karachi, I stood at the door, deep in contemplation, gazing blankly at the passing arid landscape.

Looking but not seeing. Train journeys are so sad when they bring one back to Karachi! Journeying away from Karachi is an adventure, filled with the unknown. But the journey back again is always tinged with the disenchantment of returning to the familiar, plus a streak of melancholy at the approaching separation from my companion. The landscape of Sindh is dry, yet somehow it invites me. My mind instantly transports me back into the past, to another journey with another companion through another desert in another land. It was a bus journey through the Sahara Desert in Algeria, where I discovered Islam firmly imbedded within my heart. I still remember that sliver of silver crescent moon hanging close to the horizon as we descended further south into the wilderness. Solitary traveller. Have I always been a solitary traveller? Will I always be one? Life is a lonely journey of return to our origin in Allāh. I recalled some words from an old Joni Mitchell song. “We’re just particles of change circling around the sun. How can I hold this point of view when I’m always tied and bound to someone? No one’s ever going to show me everything. We all come and go unknown.” Pervaded by intense loneliness and longing, wanting to surrender completely and love unconditionally, I realized the extent of my expectations and attachments. Terrible enemies. Living in a state of expectancy – always missing out on the immediate experience of now. Not the last moment, the one that has just passed. Not the next moment, the one that is to come. This moment. Complete surrender. Unconditional love. Give everything. Become nothing. Find Allāh now because this moment is Allāh. The loneliness is Allāh. The longing is Allāh. The train. The desert. The companion. There is nothing more manifest than Allāh, and nothing more hidden.

 *Thoughts on a train moving south.

To have travelled on the Path for many years, the depths of hopelessness and the peaks of pure joy! But, still trapped. Still suffocated by dunya. These trials. Is there ever any escape for the traveller, or is this the freedom I am seeking? The freedom of knowing, with utmost certainty, that I can do nothing.

*“Freedom and love will never mesh – so I’ve become a slave and renounced my desire.” ***

What a lover was Fakhruddin ‘Iraqi! Why do we keep trying to direct our own lives? Such a mistake! Such ignorance! To think that we know what is best for us!! Madness and blindness to think we know what is best. Surrender. Now. How? Wanting to surrender, but still the hooks of expectation are there in the heart. The hooks of nafs. Only the Saints, the Fakhruddin ‘Iraqis, the pure ones are free from these hooks. So now what? The only company I want is that of the beloved. He has become my link with Allāh. Shaykh al-Akbar, Muhyi-ud-Din Ibn al-‘Arabi would say I am wrong. I am limiting Allāh because my focus is on one of His manifestations, when He is manifest in every single speck of dust. But Mevlana Jalaluddin would say I am right. See Him through him. The beloved has become my clear locus of manifestation of Allāh and my focus is on him. Ya Shams Tabrizi! Everything should intoxicate me, but only you do!

*“Shams, help me now, being in the middle of being partly in my self, and partly outside.” **

 *Contemplation

Here within the labyrinth of dusty lanes and shadowy passageways I seem to be always in touch with humanity, acutely aware of the transitory nature of earthly existence. Life and death are everpresent in this traditional colony. The mosque is just behind our home. At the time of pray the music of the azan floats through the air, dripping down the alleyways and enters the windows. The otherworldly voice of the muezzin draws out the beautiful yet majestic phrases – “Allāh is Great...I bear witness that there is no god but Allāh...I bear witness that Muhammad is the Messenger of Allāh...Come to prayer...Come to salvation...Allāh is Great...There is no god but Allāh.”

From the bustle of the narrow main street with its spluttering rickshaws and incessant noise, fruit and vegetable vendors, boisterous school children and veiled women, I enter the quieter side streets. Returning home with the day’s provisions in hand. The gravel crunches under my shoes. The sounds of the bazaar recede and fade behind me. Turning the corner I encounter a group of silent men, walking in procession, on their shoulders a shrouded body in a roughly made wooden stretcher. The living carrying a departed soul! Sobering image. One is shaken to the core! Today I was invited to the sixth birthday party of a little boy and today a friend passed away in his seventieth year.

 *The Garden

Maghreb prayer. Pervaded by the most intense sadness and longing and loneliness. A watery image of myself in a luxuriant garden of wild growth. I am cared for and protected by someone who loves me infinitely. Warm sunlight, sweet fragrances and a reassuring hand placed ever so tenderly on my shoulder. That is Tasawwuf. The garden of the heart.

 *A lazy afternoon

Friday afternoon. In the lanes and alleyways the muffled footsteps of men returning from their noon prayers. Sandals and boots gently crushing gravel and earth. I lie on the bed, thoughts faraway, tasbih inactive in my hand. There are many beggars on the streets at this time, knocking on doors, waiting for money or food. Some enchant with their drums and pipes, enticing us with the raw sounds of their music, others, aggressive and arrogant, demand alms. In the darkness of my room I wander along strange avenues of thought, these distant sounds of human beings drifting in and out of consciousness.

The incessant drone of one lone voice enters my window, passes through the stillness to my place of afternoon reverie. His plaintive Urdu words, spilling out, do not immediately register in my mind. I've heard his voice so many times before. I am too relaxed, too lost on the waves of my thoughts, to even stir. Shame on you!

He is calling the Supreme Name, "In Allāh's Name!" He cries over and over again. "In Allāh's Name!"

Surfacing from wherever I have been my heart suddenly comprehends the words of this solitary beggar! I quickly jump-up, wrap a chadar around my shoulders. As I grab my moneybag and rush to the door the voice fades. Alas! I glance up and down the alleyway. There he is! Going! Turning the corner. Gone! He became impatient, gave up and moved on. "Ahh! Pity!"

Inside my room again, I stand on the cool marble floor, shaking my head in wonderment at the ways in which Allāh sends His Messages to us. "Ya Allāh! We must sit with the utmost respect, ever hopeful, knocking on Your Door. But ... we must be patient. We have to wait patiently! No matter how long it takes. We must not move away!"

Shaykh Abdul Qadir al-Jilani said, "He bestows bounty and only He can restore crushed hopes. Have faith, do not lose hope, wait patiently. He indeed will create a way to deliver you from your hardships."

*

 *The Promise

Yesterday, last night an expanded heart at the thought of your return.

Today, now, sorrow and tears with the news that your visit will be brief.

*Pale sunlight on the wall.
Incense smoke gracefully rising.
My heart is burned out through longing for you.*

*A day that started in madness and tears
slowly dissolves into stillness as I accept the waiting and the promise of your return.*

 Love

“O Allāh! Why did You give the human heart the capacity for so much Love then make Love too painful to bear?” When she uttered the words, “O my beloved!” a secret voice said, “Are you not yet prepared to give up your attachment to the feeling of love?”

*“Roar, lion of the heart, and tear me open!” **

10. India: “Light the Lamp of Love in the darkness of my heart!”

We were in a rickshaw on our way to the Mazar of ‘Abdullah Shah Ghazi when Mehmood very casually said, “Take us to India Amatullah. Take us all to the Urs in Ajmer Sharif!”

I was astounded. “How can I take all of you to India?”

“You can do! I am sure you can. Amatullah you must take Sabri Brothers to India! Be our promoter and take us to Ajmer Sharif.”

And so Allāh’s Plan started to manifest.

Ajmer Sharif! Back in 1995 I had written my urgent letter to the authorities in Ajmer Sharif seeking the whereabouts of Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri. And here I was in 1999 spluttering through the streets of Karachi in a rickshaw with one of the Sabri Brothers, planning a visit to that very same sacred centre in India! Destiny.

The thought of promoting the Sabri Brothers had never before entered my mind. Yet, in a way I had been promoting them from that very first moment years earlier when I had seen them on the video recording. Discussing their beautiful art of qawwali whenever I spoke with friends or was introduced to new people. On those few occasions when interviewed by newspaper journalists I inevitably described the powerful effect of Sabri Brothers’ music and voices. At every available opportunity I was unknowingly and unintentionally promoting them. I simply loved their music and wished to share the experience trying to open other eyes and hearts to the spirituality of these divinely inspired qawwals.

So, as the Sabri Brothers’ “promoter” I began making arrangements in a random and somewhat haphazard fashion, not really knowing what I was doing. Feeling my way so to speak, but always with Mehmood’s advice and assistance, never alone.

Visas. That was the highest priority. What chance did we have of obtaining visas for India? As a British Passport holder I had no problem but perhaps we would encounter obstacles with the group. But, as was stated earlier, if a Saint calls you to his Mazar then the doors will be opened, the barriers will be removed and the way will be made clear for your journey. Khwaja Mu’inuddin Chishti was certainly calling us to Ajmer Sharif.

One evening, quite spontaneously, Mehmood decided to take me to meet an old acquaintance, a lady from the Bhopal Royal Family. Over tea and sandwiches we talked about my books and the inspiration I received from Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri and Sabri Brothers. She too was a great admirer of these qawwals. We discussed Tasawwuf and the Sufi saints. She too was a devotee of the Saints. And, she also was spiritually connected to the Mazar of Nizamuddin Awliya in Delhi. The Sajjada Nashin was her Murshid. Mehmood happened to mention our yearning to go to the Urs in Ajmer Sharif. Our gracious hostess, a lady with worldly connections too, offered her assistance in any possible manner. We eagerly accepted and within a few days were on the train to Islamabad to apply for the precious visas. After several days of waiting outside the Indian High Commission, a normal procedure as I was later to learn, we obtained the treasured stamps in our Passports without undue difficulty, thanks to the gracious lady from the Bhopal Royal Family. She had assured Mehmood and me that her Murshid would be of great assistance to us in the fulfillment of any yearnings and hopes in India. Khwaja Saheb was calling us. We were on our way to him!

As I write these words I have just remembered something quite significant. From 1991 onwards, once in every year, a letter containing a small pamphlet from India would reach my post office box in Australia. Faded near-illegible print on very thin recycled coloured paper. I was always perplexed by this pamphlet, an invitation to the Urs Celebrations of Khwaja Gharib Nawaz Mu'inuddin Chishti in Ajmer Sharif, India. I knew nothing about Urs Celebrations but somehow I vaguely recalled having heard or read the name Ajmer, somewhere! Yet, how amazing it is! Khwaja Saheb was calling me for many many years, even when I did not know who he was!! The Chishti thread!

The Indian experience! How to convey the impact on a western Muslim woman travelling with a troupe of ten Pakistani qawwals and musicians! The chaos of Attari Railway Station at the Pak-India border. The moments of spiritual bliss at the Mazars of the Saints. The dark despair of desolation in the deserted streets of Delhi. The sighs of intense yearning during the Shab-e Ba'arat, the Night of Destiny, spend in isolation on a rooftop under the star filled sky in the countryside outside Mumbai. Memorable India.

Over the years Sabri Brothers have made many journeys into India by plane. This however was their first train journey and mine too. The train journey from Lahore to Delhi is total chaos and it is also utterly hilarious. A sense of humour is essential because without a sense of the absurd and ridiculous, without the ability to laugh at the situation one finds oneself in, the journey would be horrific. Thank heavens for my Australian sense of humour and sense of adventure. The border crossing is a spectacle. As the train pulls into the first station on the Pakistani side of the border, men and women jump off the still moving vehicle. Some of them fall and quickly scramble to their feet to join in the battle for the antique, squeaky, heavy luggage trolleys. Then it is a fight for dear life to retain the prized trolley, whilst other family members hurl bags and cases, bundles and boxes through the train doors and windows onto the platform, caring little whether anyone is hit and injured in the process. Manners and courtesy are nonexistent. Screaming women and children, angry and abusive men, try to push their mountains of baggage through the one and only door leading into the large Passport Control hall. Then, the long hot wait in queues, with dozens of ceiling fans buzzing overhead.

Thankfully Sabris and myself are reasonably calm and composed with only one of the qawwals having a lens punched out of his glasses whilst another limps on his badly squashed foot! I later developed huge purple bruises on my legs after being thoroughly shoved and jostled by an oversized Pakistani woman. The scene is so bizarre I am unable to suppress my laughter. I feel like an actor in a Jacques Tati movie! But we are lucky. All of the Passport Officers are so excited to see Sabri Brothers accompanied by the white lady with the British passport. We are ushered through the crowds to the front where our passports are stamped without any delay. We sip from glasses of cool water. More and more travellers spill through the tiny door into the vast hall. Hundreds of faces are facing us, hundreds of eyes staring at the great qawwals. Then we crush our way through more small doors to the Customs Hall where we are once again shown the greatest respect. With the minimum of formality we pass through to the platform itself, find some empty seats on the train and then take up the long long wait for several hours whilst those hundreds of other travellers are processed and searched and questioned.

After copious cups of tea and many walks along the platform and hours of waiting and dozing, the train is ready to depart, packed full of baggage and travellers. The train literally crawls along the track between Pakistan and India for a very short distance, perhaps only a kilometer or two. A dashing Sikh soldier dressed in crisp khaki uniform and turban gallops on horseback alongside the train, escorting us into India past the high barbed wire barrier that stretches into the distance marking the end of Pakistan and the beginning of India.

The Sabris come from India, all having been born there except Mehmood, the only one of the family to be born in Pakistan. This is an important and nostalgic journey for them and an honour for me, from faraway Australia, to be with them. Destiny. A dream-come-true, to be sure!

We now must wait a further ten, twelve, fifteen hours to be “processed”. Here it becomes my responsibility to fill out each and every immigration form for each and every member of the group. I don’t know how it became my duty but somehow I slip comfortably and effortlessly into my new rôle. I go to and fro along the station getting chai for Sabri Saheb or changing Pakistani currency into Indian or buying food for the qawwals. I soon realize that I have a real job to do! I am not merely going along for the ride so to speak. I am actually taking care of the Sabri Brothers!

Throughout the Attari Station ordeal of our three train journeys to India in 1999, 2000 and 2001, I have noticed that Haji Maqbool Ahmed Sabri is utterly calm and composed. He is patient when all around him are in frenzied agitation. He simply sits on a seat, his prayer beads moving gently through his fingers, his lips uttering the remembrances of Allāh. Nothing hassles him. Mehmood and the group members and myself make sure his every need is fulfilled. Many people come to him wanting to shake his hand and give salaams. He simply smiles back serenely, his lips still busy with the zikrullah. And when he is not reciting his zikr he is lost in his music. He is somewhere else – immersed in the notes as new compositions come to life.

I am somewhat of an oddity on this station – white lady, obviously Muslim, travelling with a group of Pakistani musicians. The Sikh guards and customs officials are curious and often stop me to look at my British Passport and ask many questions, perplexity written on their faces. What is she, an Australian with British Passport, doing with those Pakistani qawwals?

Eventually we get onto the train that will take us to Delhi. It is night when the train finally pulls out of the station after our fifteen-hour wait. We will arrive in Delhi before dawn.

As the darkness of the night sky softens into the tender soft pink of dawn we load our baggage onto the horsedrawn carts at the end of the Delhi railway platform. But before climbing up into our seats on the carts we sit around on wooden benches drinking steaming hot sweet Indian chai. We are all tired and grubby after the journey but we are all excited. I look around at the scene. I am in Delhi. Unbelievable! And I am with the Sabri Brothers. Amazing! And we are now going to the Mazar of Nizamuddin Awliya. Incredible!

Hazrat Nizamuddin Awliya is known as the Beloved of Allah, Mehboob Ilahi, and the King of Shaykhs, Sultan al-Masha'ikh. Hazrat was born in Badaon near Delhi around the year 636 AH (1243 AD) and was named Muhammad. When he was five years old his father passed away. His mother Bibi Zulaika a woman of great piety inculcated in her only son a deep and abiding love for religious devotion and a spirit of resignation and contentment. The family lived in abject poverty but it was his mother's spiritual strength that enabled them to accept the hardships without complaint. When there wasn't any food to eat she would say, "Nizamuddin! Today we are the guests of Allāh", a remark from which the young Nizamuddin gained immense spiritual solace. Often she would say, "You will be a man of destiny one day!"

From Badaon the family moved to Delhi where Nizamuddin devoted himself to his studies. He was training to become a qazi. But before leaving Badaon, when Nizamuddin was only twelve years old, he heard for the first time the name Baba Fariduddin Ganj-i Shakar spoken by a visiting qawwal. The seed was planted in his heart and he developed a great love for the Saint in Ajodhan (Pakpattan Sharif). After every prayer Nizamuddin would utter, ten times, the name of his future Pir-O-Murshid. With the passing of time the seed blossomed and his desire to become a qazi diminished and faded. His heart and head were turned towards Baba Farid in Ajodhan (Pakpattan Sharif). He was twenty years old when he reached the humble hut of Baba Farid. The Saint who was then in his late eighties initiated Nizamuddin into the Chishti Silsila. During the next three years Nizamuddin visited his Pir-O-Murshid three times, each visit extending for several months. His spiritual training was completed in these three visits. At this point he was undecided whether he should continue his formal studies or turn himself in totality to the spiritual path. Baba Farid advised him to undertake the two, formal and spiritual, until one "gets an upper hand over the other."

In 664 AH (1265 AD) when bestowing khilafat on Nizamuddin, Baba Farid said, "You will be a tree under whose soothing shadow people will find comfort." And so it was! And so it is! Nizamuddin was hesitant, not wanting to shoulder such an immense responsibility. Baba Farid declared, "Nizam! Take it from me; though I do not know if I will be honoured before the Almighty or not, I promise not to enter paradise without your disciples in my company."

Nizamuddin left for Delhi never to see his beloved Pir-O-Murshid again. Baba Farid passed away very soon afterwards. It has been written that when Baba Farid's tomb was being constructed Hazrat Nizamuddin Awliya arranged for one entire Qur'an to be recited over each brick.

Hazrat Nizamuddin Awliya was twenty-three years of age when he was appointed the successor of Baba Fariduddin Ganj-i Shakar and became Head of the Chishti Silsila. Throughout his sixty years as spiritual leader he was a living "tree under whose soothing shadow" countless homeless, destitute and broken people and also kings, soldiers, statesman and noblemen found rest. And today, nearly seven hundred years after his passing away, his blessed shade still gives ease and delight to the multitudes of devotees who come to him from all corners of the world. During his lifetime Hazrat Nizamuddin spread the Chishti message of love and service far and wide through India, more than any other Chishti Master before or after him.

Whenever Nizamuddin Awliya is mentioned the name of Amir Khusrau seems to reverberate and echo nearby, Amir Khusrau, the most beloved of all his murids. Amir Khusrau, born in Delhi of Turkish origin, met Nizamuddin Awliya at a very young age when they resided in the same area of Delhi. The story of his first bai'at, oath of allegiance, with Nizamuddin Awliya is a beautiful one. His father wanted him to become a murid but the young Amir Khusrau declined, saying that he could not be a murid without having the pure intention to be one. So, when the father and elder brother went inside the room for their bai'at Amir Khusrau waited outside. He composed a verse in his mind and thought, "If Hazrat is a true man of spiritual insight he will know about my verse and he will answer it. In which case I will become his murid!" Almost immediately a servant came to him and recited Hazrat Nizamuddin Awliya's answer, also in verse. Amir Khusrau has been quoted as saying that he became like a crazy man and rushed inside, fell at Hazrat's feet and became his murid. He renewed his bai'at regularly throughout his life.

Sama' played an integral part in the life of Hazrat Nizamuddin Awliya at his khanqah. Often he would go into ecstasy when hearing the qawwals singing mystic songs and tears would flow endlessly from his eyes. He would wipe his tears with small pieces of cloth and then throw these torn pieces before the qawwals. Such was his immersion in the qawwal's message of Divine Love. Amir Khusrau was a musical genius as well as being the most gifted poet of his age. Not only is he credited with inventing new techniques in composition and music but, some say, he also invented the sitar. Qawwals to this day consider Amir Khusrau to be the father of their art. Hazrat Nizamuddin and his beloved Amir Khusrau shared a great passion for music. All the qawwals of the city used to flock to the khanqah. Hazrat was such a connoisseur of music that under his guidance the qawwals raised music to the height of a sublime art, to the level of a spiritual discipline.

Hazrat Nizamuddin Awliya passed away on the 18th Rabi ul-Awwal 725 AH (1325 AD). In accordance with Hazrat's wishes his bier was preceded by qawwals singing a couplet of Shaykh Saadi. As fate would have it Amir Khusrau was absent from Delhi at the time. So overwhelmed with grief was he when he finally reached the grave of his beloved Pir-O-Murshid that he blackened his face with earth, tore his clothes and fell in a swoon whilst reciting: "The fair one lies on the couch with her black tresses scattered on her face; O Khusrau, come home now, for night has fallen all over the world.” Within six months he too passed away and his Mazar is at the foot of the one whom he loved so much, his Pir-O-Murshid, Hazrat Nizamuddin.

There is spiritual beauty emanating from the Mazars of the Awliya’ Allāh, an ineffable beauty that penetrates and fills the surrounding atmosphere and illuminates the hearts of the devotees. Even when the Mazar itself is completely devoid of architectural beauty it is the inward beauty of the Saint who rests within that is transmitted to all his lovers and guests, to the air above and to the earth beneath. If however the Mazar is architecturally beautiful, as with that of Hazrat Nizamuddin Awliya, this combination of outward beauty of the Mazar and inward beauty of the Saint is inexpressibly sweet.

As his Pir-O-Murshid Baba Fariduddin had predicted Hazrat Nizamuddin became that immense shady tree under which humanity would find ease and protection, a haven, a sanctuary and a realm of peace. Till this day Hazrat Nizamuddin has been showering love upon his visitors. His kitchen is open to feed every hungry person and his heart is open to give nourishment to innumerable thirsty souls.

Each Saint has his own spiritual fragrance. Each Mazar is different from every other Mazar. An elusive sweetness, tinged with the slightest hint of heart-melting poignancy, engulfs me at the Mazar of Hazrat Nizamuddin Awliya. I may feel at home in the Darbar of Baba Fariduddin in Pakpattan Sharif, but in this Darbar of Nizamuddin Awliya, Mehboob Ilahi something indescribably and unbearably tender overwhelms the heart.

* A Botswanan Reverie: Hazrat Nizamuddin and Amir Khusrau

Irshad was high on Love Itself. “Ishq!” he exclaimed. “Ecstatic Love!” We were gathered around the glowing embers of a fire in a garden in Botswana. Khalid had invited us to his home for spiritual companionship and to share a meal. As our bodies were warmed by heat radiating from the fire the flames of love in our hearts were being fanned into a blaze by the passion of Irshad’s words.

“Ishq!”

And the vastness of a night sky filled with myriads of stars covered and protected us in its velvety embrace.

Whenever I was with Irshad, somehow our conversations always arrived at this point. No matter from where we started on the dry shore we would always end swimming in the Ocean of ‘ishq, the ‘ishq of Amir Khusrau for his Beloved Pir-O-Murshid Hazrat Nizamuddin Awliya.

In his poetry this intoxicated murid captured and expressed the ecstatic heights of his love then transformed them into ragas of overpowering beauty. And eight hundred years later the lovers still reel in rapture when the qawwal utters these phrases of passion. The first qawwali I ever experienced was by Amir Khusrau. “You have given me the nectar of love to drink and you made me drunk the moment my eyes met yours!” He is incomparable, the father of qawwali, the king of ‘ishq.

As we stared into the carmine embers, each of us lost in his or her own private ‘ishq, someone asked Irshad, “If Amir Khusrau loved Hazrat Nizamuddin so passionately and he loved Amir Khusrau so much why didn’t he make him his khalifa?”

Irshad’s eyes were covered with the mist of longing as his words erupted in a shower of passion. “How could Nizamuddin make him his khalifa? No wonder he didn’t make Amir Khusrau his khalifa! Can you imagine? What sort of a tariqa it would be! The Khusrau tariqa! Subhanallah! The intensity of ‘ishq would have burned up everything. The world would have gone mad with love! Hazrat Nizamuddin knew this. He didn’t, he couldn’t make him his khalifa. A tariqa mad with love! Mad ... with love!”

Hazrat Nizamuddin used to pray: “Forgive me my Lord for the sake of the burning passion of love of Khusrau’s heart.”

Sitting by a fire in Botswana. But in my mind and heart I am once again in Delhi sitting at the feet of Nizamuddin, right at his door. As close as any woman is permitted to go to the Saint here in the physical realm. Fingers interlacing, forehead touching the cool marble filigree. Tears flowing. Heart connected. Behind me, buried at the feet of his Beloved, lies Hazrat Amir Khusrau. Shattered to pieces when his Nizamuddin passed away he followed soon after to be reunited with his Beloved in the realm of spirits. “Beholding your face I offer myself in sacrifice.”

The setting for qawwali mehfil at Mazars is always spiritually powerful. The qawwals sit facing the doors of the Mazar whilst the listeners gather along either side, leaving the space between the qawwals and the Saint open – a passage for communication and praise. At the Mazar of Hazrat Nizamuddin Awliya the setting is both powerful and poignant. Not only is the Saint himself directly in front of the qawwals but Hazrat Amir Khusrau, the “father of qawwali”, is directly behind them. What a blessed spot! The qawwals and the devotees gathered for the mehfil occupy the energized space between the Saint and his favourite murid.

The ritual of making an offering, nazrana, during the qawwali mehfil is complex, its very foundation being the hierarchical structure of the Sufi Silsila itself. It has many social, economic and spiritual aspects but the money offering actually symbolizes the devotee’s stripping himself of everything in the sacrifice of love of the Beloved. In the past ecstatic devotees would spontaneously give their clothing and possessions. Today the divestment is usually in the form of money though I have witnessed certain people who, under the influence of a spiritual state, have given watches and jewellery to the qawwals.

The most moving offering I saw was a dervish symbolically taking his heart from his breast and placing it before the Sabris! Beautiful!

When a devotee is stirred by the qawwali, when his heart is moved or overcome with love or awe, he presents his offering to the Shaykh who presides over the mehfil. In the absence of a spiritual representative the offering is symbolically presented to the Saint. This offering is then passed to the qawwals. The money has been blessed. The Sabri mehfiles at the Mazar of Hazrat Nizamuddin Awliya were always late into the night when very few devotees were gathered in the tranquil Darbar. On these occasions the doors of the Mazar were locked for the night and there were no spiritual heads present to preside over the mehfiles. As each devotee rose to offer his nazrana he would first walk discreetly and respectfully to the steps of the Mazar. Gently he would touch the top step with his nazrana, a beautifully moving gesture of love and respect. He would then take his blessed offering to the Sabris, and pass it either directly in Maqbool Saheb or Mehmood's hand or place it on top of one of their harmoniums. Nazrana is blessed money and greatly respected by qawwals who consider it a gift from the Saint himself.

Late into the night we assemble for a quiet, devotional mehfil in the Darbar of the Beloved of Allah, Mehboob Ilahi, Hazrat Nizamuddin. There are very few devotees scattered across the marble courtyard but the sound of harmoniums, dholak and tabla enchant and entice them to gather in ceremonial manner around the qawwals from Pakistan. I sit white faced amidst the bronzed. Across the courtyard another pale faced one. Young Frenchman, lost in his rapture. Jerome. Now a Muslim named Qadir. Wearing a cloak of many colours. Head of blonde hair thrown back, glazed eyes staring in bewilderment into the star filled heavens. The whirling begins. Arms outstretched. His ecstasy. Was it pure ecstasy or was the ecstasy induced with the aid of hashish?

The Mazar of Hazrat Nizamuddin Awliya is utterly intimate. Gently, ever so gently the Saint calls and invites his lovers to come close, and yet closer, and sit with him. I love this Mazar, delicate and exquisite, nestled close to the high red walls of the mosque. The luminous presence of Hazrat Nizamuddin renders everything enchanting!

Long years ago when living in Australia, before any thoughts of India or Pakistan, I saw a dream. In that dream of long years ago I was called by a very special name. Someone in the dream called me "the saintly lady of Delhi"!

But everyone, "every one" who visits the courtyard of Mehboob Ilahi, everyone whose sandals touch the earth in the lanes outside or whose glance falls in the direction of the Noble Mazar or who catches a waft of the fragrance from his blessed presence, every one is coloured with a tint of his saintliness, so generous in Mehboob Ilahi!

"Aaj rang hai," sang Hazrat Amir Khusrau, "Today is the colour of my Beloved, Nizamuddin Awliya!"

Near to the Moin Guesthouse on the roadside beneath our window stood the chai trolley of an old man whom we named Kashmiri Baba. He was a poor man, like so many of those who flock to the Darbar of Hazrat Nizamuddin Awliya, their tree of protection. Kashmiri Baba gave us the sweetest chai. He thought I was a rich lady from the West. So he asked for money, for his daughter he said, which I gave even though I think he probably spent it on hashish or something! He was a poor man yet he gave Mehmood a handful of semi-precious stones and to me he handed a beautiful pendant of malakite set in silver! C'est le mystere! It is a mystery! We never saw Kashmiri Baba after that first stay in Basti Nizamuddin. And we missed him sorely and his sweet chai and wrinkled smile.

Hazrat Nizamuddin Awliya said,

“In truth, the one who is reliant upon Allāh is the one who disposes of people’s pain and suffering.”

“Of all the worships the one that most pleases Allāh is to bring relief to the humble and oppressed.”

At last we are on the road to Ajmer Sharif in Rajasthan. With each passing kilometre the yearning becomes more intense, the awareness that we are approaching the Courtyard of the Greatest Saint in India. Agitation is felt in the solar plexus as waves of adrenalin sweep through the body. This, our first journey to Ajmer Sharif, is by van in the night. All we see of Jaipur, the pink city, is its lights as we swiftly drive through the streets. The journey is long and we are all crammed tightly into the van along with our baggage and musical instruments. The beams of headlights from oncoming vehicles illuminate our sleepy faces. It is a silent journey. No one speaks. Each one either lost in thoughts of the destination or smoking silently or on the verge of a brief nap. Occasionally we take a rest stop at a roadside hotel for sweet chai. Then, back into the van and onwards to the Celebration.

The sun rises. An arid landscape surrounds us. We pass scattered huts and shelters with women in colourful saris swaying along the road, heavy silver bracelets and anklets shining against their dark skin. So different to Pakistan! Such vibrant colours here in Hindustan! We cover the remaining kilometers through densely clustered dwellings. Our van comes to a halt in one of the dusty roads at the foot of the hill upon which stands the Darbar of the Sultan-ul-Hind, Khwaja Mu’innuddin Chishti. Dazed after the night’s journey yet exuberant we scrambled out of the hot van into the cool refreshing morning breeze. We have arrived in Ajmer Sharif.

Haji Maqbool Ahmed Sabri raises his hands in private supplication, his eyes moist with tears. This is the man who wrote Khwaja Ki Diwani. And these are the qawwals who have inspired countless people throughout the world with that song of devotion to Khwaja Mu'inuddin Chishti.

*“O Khwaja, I have come to your town like a beggar and all the people say I am possessed, obsessed and enchanted
Diwani, diwani, diwani, by you!
How can love be kept a secret?
Even if they stitch my lips together
This heart of mine will say ... diwani, diwani
Khwaja Ki Diwani.”*

Together we stand in the streets of Khwaja's town. We are tired and grubby but we have reached. Khwaja called us and we came.

Khwaja Mu'inuddin Chishti was born around the year 536 AH (1141 AD) in the province of Sijistan in Persia. His parents were descendants of the Holy Prophet Muhammad and they named their son Muinuddin Hasan. He is now known as Gharib Nawaz, the Helper of the Poor, and Sultan-ul-Hind, the King of India. Many legends are told about Khwaja Gharib Nawaz and there are many miracles attributed to him, but little reliable historical information is available about this Great Saint who spread the Sufi message of Love and Peace throughout India.

Whilst in his teens he was orphaned but he was far from destitute having inherited land from his father. It is told how one day a majzub gave him a piece of oil cake that he had himself chewed. Through that piece of cake, mixed with the saliva of the majzub, a transmission of mystical knowledge took place. Khwaja Saheb now yearned for spiritual enlightenment and, after distributing his wealth, set off on his journey in the quest for knowledge. In Samarkand and Balkh he studied at the universities and met Sufis. He then travelled to Iraq where he was destined to meet his Pir-O-Murshid, the Chishti Saint, Khwaja Usman Harooni. For twenty years Khwaja Saheb served his master, travelling with him and carrying his belongings. Khwaja Usman Harooni was training and grooming his murid, Khwaja Saheb, and Khwaja Saheb was totally obedient to his Murshid. In Baghdad in the year 582 AH, when Khwaja Saheb's spiritual training was complete, Khwaja Usman Harooni blessed him, made him his khalifa then bid him farewell. It was time for Khwaja Saheb, now in his mid-forties, to become a spiritual guide for others to travel on the path of heart purification and enlightenment. Khwaja Saheb now set out alone on another journey.

The quest for knowledge has no end and even the greatest saints never cease seeking knowledge, no matter what heights of spirituality they have attained. The Holy Qur'an tells man to pray, "Oh Allāh, increase me in knowledge!"

Khwaja Saheb soon met the young man who was destined to become his successor. Accounts differ as to the place of this meeting. It was either in the city of Isfahan or Baghdad that he encountered the seventeen-year-old Qutbuddin Bakhtiyar.

Seeing the signs of immense spirituality in the young man Khwaja Saheb initiated him into the Chishtiyya Silsila.

Khwaja Saheb then went to Holy Makka to perform his Haj. And it was in Madina that he received inspiration from the Holy Prophet, an inspiration that eventually guided him to the city of Ajmer in Rajasthan in India. Ajmer was the site from which his teachings and message of Universal love would spread throughout the entire Subcontinent. But before reaching Ajmer he went to the Mazar of the great saint, Data Ganj Baksh Ali Hujwiri in Lahore and secluded himself close to the Saint for a forty-day retreat, chilla, of intense meditation and zikr.

There are many stories told about Khwaja Saheb in Ajmer Sharif. Many miracles are attributed to him and mass conversions of Hindus. He was not welcomed in the city when he and his entourage arrived. But Khwaja Saheb was on a divinely inspired mission so nothing could deter him from fulfilling it. He decided to settle under a shady tree in the vicinity of the beautiful Anasagar Lake but the hostile Raja wanted him out of Ajmer. In an endeavour to force him and his murids to depart the Raja prevented them from taking water from the lake. Khwaja Saheb ordered one of his murids to collect just one cupful of water from Anasagar and, it is told, as he filled the cup with water the entire contents of the lake dried up, along with all the wells and lakes in the vicinity and also the milk in the breasts of all nursing mothers.

Khwaja Saheb's message was and is one of universal love, therefore his love extended to everyone regardless of race, religion, caste or status. He respected all. As a true messenger of love he bore no enmity towards anyone and many were the Hindus who, recognizing the signs of sainthood in him, came to seek his blessings and spiritual guidance. Within the Chishti tradition it is said that when Khwaja Saheb observed the passion with which the Hindus sang their religious songs, using a variety of musical instruments, he sought divine permission, from the Holy Prophet, to use music and verse for his mission. Divine permission was granted. Many Hindus embraced Islam, not through compulsion but through ... love. Khwaja Saheb also introduced into the zikr of his murids several breathing techniques, such as breath control, derived from yoga practices.

Khwaja Saheb believed that the best and highest manner of devotion to Allāh was to relieve the misery of the distressed, to fulfill the needs of the helpless and to feed the hungry and his advice to all future generations of Chishtis is to have generosity like a river, affection like the sun and humility like the earth. Khwaja Saheb was in his ninties when he passed away from this earthly realm to be reunited with his Beloved. On the night of 5th Rajab 633 AH (1236 AD) Khwaja Saheb retired to his room for devotions, prayers and meditation. The following morning, 6th of Rajab, it was discovered that he had died. Legend has it that the words, "He is a beloved of Allāh and he died in the love of Allāh" were written upon his forehead. These words are now inscribed upon his tomb. Just prior to his passing away Khwaja Gharib Nawaz Mu'inuddin Chishti named his favourite murid, Hazrat Qutbuddin Bakhtiyar Kaki, as his successor. The Chishti Silsila has Hazrat Qutbuddin's name after that of Khwaja Saheb though some historical documents claim that Hazrat Qutbuddin predeceased his Pir-O-Murshid by several months. Nonetheless he was the spiritual successor of the Sultan-ul-Hind Khwaja Mu'inuddin Chishti.

Prior to the journey from Delhi to Ajmer Sharif, the sajjada nashin at the Mazar of Hazrat Nizamuddin Awliya had recommended that we put ourselves under the care of a certain family of Khadims. Carrying our luggage we climbed through the narrow lanes that wind their way up the hill towards the Darbar. Coming to a side alley we proceeded a short distance to find ourselves in front of an old building named Wali Manzil. We entered and were greeted by our Khadims who then made all arrangements for our stay in the Saint's city.

There are about 4000 khadims, men and women, in Ajmer Sharif. All are descendants of Hazrat Khwaja Saiyyed Fakhruddin Gardezi who was the personal servant and attendant of Khwaja Mu'inuddin Chishti. The word khadim comes from khidmat meaning "service". It is the responsibility of the khadims to be of service to the visitors and devotees at the shrine, to take care of their needs and ensure that their stay is pleasant. And it is the duty of the khadims to look after the ceremonial rites and rituals of the Shrine.

Before making our first ziyarat to the Mazar Sharif we settle in our temporary home just near to Wali Manzil. We bathe and don fresh clothes and apply itr in order to present ourselves at the Court of the King. Then, as each of us is ready, either singly or in twos and threes we make our way up the hill, along the alleyways to our destination, the Darbar.

On this special first visit Mehmood and I climb the steep narrow lane winding our way amongst hundreds of people. Many men in the crowd immediately recognize Mehmood. They embrace him warmly and then invite us to drink chai with them or share a small snack. "Later, later," smiles Mehmood in reply, indicating that we are on our way to give salaams to Khwaja Saheb. Slipping off our sandals at the gates of the Darbar we silently approach the Mazar, stepping over sleeping children and old women, winding our way amongst the multitudes. Then, amazingly, we are there in front of the gilded doors of the Mazar. We have travelled so far from Karachi to present ourselves before Khwaja Saheb. We are filled with love and yearning.

The official guard at the doors is somewhat aggressive in his manner as he indicates that we should put money into the donation box. Surely Khwaja Saheb does not want compulsory gifts! I discreetly slip some banknotes through the slot on the top of the box. The guard brusquely rubs his wand of peacock feathers across the sacred doors of the Mazar and then hits our heads and backs with the iridescent green and blue plumes to transfer the blessing! With our concentration on the saint who rests in his Mazar we manage to find a way around this official without too much difficulty. All Kings have their bodyguards. We came for the King.

Huge colourful canvas canopies give shade to the mass of devotees in the Darbar. Electric fans buzz on all the columns and from the decoratively painted ceilings of the many porches and arcades. But still the marble courtyard is burning hot as we step lightly and briskly to the next piece of shade. From the midst of one section of crowd come the sounds of harmonium and dholak and the voice of a qawwal. Mehmood smiles at me. “Come!” He reaches into his pocket and withdraws a few banknotes. I reach into my bag and bring forth more notes. Then holding the offering, the nazrana, on our joined palms we weave through the people and bow low, placing the gift into the waiting hand of the old qawwal. He smiles at Mehmood. Maybe he too has recognized this Sabri Brother! It is incredibly moving to witness the perfect courtesy that Mehmood Sabri shows towards all other qawwals.

For ten days our home is the huge sunlit room on the top floor of the old building near Wali Manzil. Chadars and pillows are spread across the cool bare floor upon which we will eat and sleep. A heavy colourful patterned curtain is hung across one corner of the room thereby making a separate space for me, the only woman in the troupe. Word then goes out that after so many long years of absence, the Sabri Brothers have finally come to the Urs in Ajmer Sharif. From that time onwards, for the ten days of our stay, a flow of visitors climbs the stairs to our room to sit in the company of Haji Maqbool Ahmed Sabri and Mehmood, to talk with them, be inspired by them or simply to observe, in awe, the great Pakistani qawwals.

In our sunny room mehfiles were discussed and arranged. Apart from the nightly qawwali at the Mazar Sharif there were many private ones for various Sufi shaykhs and their murids. Throughout our stay the Sabris usually sang at about four or five mehfiles each night. As soon as one programme finished we would be off, walking through the intricate alleyways to their next mehfil. The two brothers were often hoarse when they awoke the following day, their throats dry and swollen. Yet by night they had recovered their strength and their voices. No mehfil was ever refused. This was Ajmer Sharif! This was Khwaja Saheb’s Urs! Blessings were descending in abundance.

My experience of my first Urs in Ajmer Sharif was a qawwali experience. Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri had come to me in many dreams and in one dream he had told Nusrat Fateh Ali Khan that I was the lady who was going to write the book about him, so I wanted to taste as much as I could of what the Sabri Brothers tasted. Of course I could never taste the intoxication that they experienced when sitting before and singing for the Sultan-ul-Hind Khwaja Gharib Nawaz. Though, I did savor some of the enchantment!

Many times Mehmood has related to me this beautifully moving story about an incident that occurred in Ajmer Sharif in 1977. And it surely is a powerful image! Mehmood had joined the group only two years prior to this miraculous event. This was when the Sabri Brothers were at the very height of their fame and popularity. Everyone in Pakistan and India knew the Sabri Brothers, Haji Ghulam Farid and Haji Maqbool Sabri. Their names were household words.

On this particular night in 1977 all four Sabri Brothers were at the mehfil in the Darbar. They were sitting in the usual place facing the shining doors of the Mazar of Khwaja Gharib Namaz. They were surrounded by thousands of devotees. I can imagine the crush of people, the fervour and love and joy and abandon. The vibrant colours, predominately green and orange, and the delicate all engulfing fragrance of rose.

The Sabri Brothers started to sing their stirring qawwali about Khwaja Saheb, a qawwali called Savairey Savairey, (In the very early morn), a qawwali that continues to stir and move audiences to ecstatic heights. On this night the mass of devoted followers became more ecstatic with each phrase and gesture of the qawwals. The energy within the Darbar was pulsating with devotion and yearning.

The impassioned cry of Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri, the artistry of Haji Maqbool's voice, the fervent repetitions of the chorus, the dynamic beats of the dholak and the rain of nazrana fluttering down upon the qawwals.

They were singing extremely powerful verses when the miraculous happening occurred.

Kisi gham zada nay jo Khwaja Piya ko tarap kar bulaya Savairey Savairey, Khazana Muhammadka hathon mein layka wahein unko banta Savairey Savairey.

When a grief-stricken person tremulously called on Beloved Khwaja in the very early morn.

In his hands he received the Treasury of Muhammad being distributed everywhere in the very early morn.

Suddenly the heavy padlock on the Mazar snapped. The gleaming doors swung open revealing the grave of the Saint inside. There was no longer a physical barrier between Khwaja Gharib Nawaz and his devotees. The Sabri Brothers were now face to face with the Greatest Saint in India, the Founder of the Chishti Silsila in the Subcontinent. The multitudes gasped in amazement! The qawwali grew more intense. Devotees in the crowd exclaimed, "Khwaja Saheb has given his ultimate blessings to Sabri Brothers!"

Savairey Savairey is extremely potent. I remember the first time I heard it back in 1995 when I was in the bushland paradise of Australia. I was watching Sabri Brothers on The Magic of Sabri Brothers, a video recording of a 1991 concert in Dubai. Suddenly I was overwhelmed by an immense inrush (warid) of 'ishq. Next thing I realized I was no longer sitting in front of the video player. I was out in the bushland, standing on a fallen tree trunk, staring into the dense mass of undergrowth and I was sobbing and crying my heart out. This is the hal, spiritual state, or wajd, ecstasy that descends upon some devotees during the qawwali. My mind did not understand any of the poetry yet my heart knew it all! How did I get from the television to the fallen log? I was drowning in the Ocean, burning in the Fire of 'ishq. Lost in the power of the qawwali. The magic of Sabri Brothers! The spiritual rank of Khwaja Saheb! Savairey Savairey is a powerful qawwali indeed!

The Sabri Brothers have performed their qawwali in numerous prestigious venues throughout the world, Carnegie Hall, Royal Albert Hall, Sydney's Opera House, concert halls in St Petersburg and Moscow, the Royal Palace in Marrakesh. The Sabri Brothers have sung for worldly Kings and Queens, Princes, Ambassadors, Generals and Prime Ministers, for the wealthy and for the élite. They have been showered with honours and shown great respect from East to West, North to South.

Yet, with all this acclaim and admiration they have remained unassuming, simple and gentle traditional musicians. They have travelled around the globe spreading the message of Divine Love. Jetsetting qawwals! When rooms in a five star hotel are provided for them they happily accept. When a hard floor in a third rate guesthouse is to be their bed they are equally well pleased. Their work is solely to create beautiful music to inspire and uplift the people.

No setting, no matter how illustrious, could ever compare with the Court of the Great Sufi Saint, Khwaja Mu'inuddin Chishti in Ajmer Sharif, Rajasthan. This is the center, the source, the sacred site from where the qawwals' message of Divine Love originated.

There's a thread running through this book, a beautiful Chishti thread. Weaving its way through the events and encounters, looping its loop and tying its bow around my heart!

The Sultan of India, Khwaja Saheb, is King for everyone - Muslims, Christians, Hindus, Sikhs and Parsis. There are no barriers, no dividing lines or distinctions. And basically that is what the Sufi Message of Divine Love is all about. Love of Allāh and love of His creation. Khwaja Saheb's supreme advice to those who tread the Sufi Path is: to have affection like the sun, hospitality like a river and humility like the earth. Love all and hate none. This is the message of the Chishti Silsila. And unlike many Mazars where women are prohibited from entering, Khwaja Saheb's Mazar is open for all. In his lifetime everyone was welcome and after his passing away everyone is still welcome. This is the true spirit of the Chishtis!

The laying of chadars and scattering of flowers and perfume upon the Mazars of the Saints are acts of love and devotion. They are gifts from the hearts of devotees. They are forms of respect and honour. By displaying the spiritual status of a waliullah love is thereby implanted within the hearts of the people. From the vantage point of our first floor balcony we watched a seemingly endless processions of chadar bearers in the narrow street beneath. Chadars of many sizes and colours, some purchased from the stores in the lanes surrounding the Dargah, others brought from faraway places, lovingly sewn and embroidered by devotees in distant cities and villages and even in other countries. The most sumptuous one was from Hyderabad in the Deccan. It was huge. Perhaps eighty devotees held the edges whilst dozens more walked underneath holding it aloft. Walking ahead were the musicians playing that unmistakable beat – the dhamal – on dholaks and larger barrel shaped drums. Everyone was singing. So much exuberance and love, it was beautifully infectious. The chadar probably took an entire year to complete with its lavish embroidery of Khwaja Gharib Nawaz's Mazar encircled by stars and flowers and birds.

The ceremony of placing a chadar is charged with emotion. It is a breathtaking experience in which the devotee takes his humble offering to place before the King. I remember when I was very young I saw photographs of the Royal Coronation of Queen Elizabeth II at Westminster Abbey in London. The crown, the long velvet train of her robe, the pomp and pageantry, what an enchantment! To carry a chadar is like taking part in a coronation. But at this coronation in Ajmer Sharif everyone is welcome, the doors are wide open beckoning the poor, the wealthy, the healthy, the infirm, men, women, Muslims, Sikhs, Christians, Hindus, Parsis, beckoning and inviting all to place their offerings on the Mazar and to receive the blessings of the Sultan-ul-Hind.

Haji Maqbool Ahmed Sabri, Mehmood and the group plus myself made preparations for the ceremony. In our room Mehmood recited the Fatiha and dua's over several boxes of sweets that were then distributed. We then climbed through the lanes to the Darbar and opened our chadar, carrying it high above our heads at arms length, each of us holding onto the outer corners and edges. And as we proceeded to cross the crowded courtyard Sabri Saheb and Mehmood and the group all sang the traditional song that is sung when chadars are laid upon the Mazars of the Awliya' Allāh. Passing devotees tried to touch or kiss the chadar for the blessings.

There are hundreds of thousands of people present in Ajmer Sharif during the Urs. And each one hopes to enter the Inner Sanctum of the Mazar to offer salutations and seek blessings from Khwaja Gharib Nawaz. The khadims try to keep an orderly flow of devotees passing through the Mazar but there is always congestion, squeezing and constriction as they push and shove in their eagerness and impatience to enter. Our khadims were waiting near the Mazar to escort us to the presence of Khwaja Saheb. With the qawwals encircling me in a wall of protection we somehow managed to flow on this wave of fervour to the sanctity of the interior. Our khadims helped us weave our way, through the dense mass of devotees, to the railing that encloses the actual grave. There is immense solemnity at this place. Devotees and lovers engage in silent communion with Khwaja Saheb, offering prayers, giving salaams from the many friends back home, private moments when each is lost in his or her own personal dialogue, outpourings of the heart to the Friend of Allāh.

It had only been a few weeks earlier that Mehmood had said, "Take us to India!" and here we were standing in the presence of Khwaja Saheb at his Mazar. When Khwaja Saheb calls everything just falls into place.

Auspicious moments and blessings descend as we stand beside the tomb. One of our khadims lifted a corner of the topmost fragrant chadar on the Mazar and pulled it over Mehmood's and my heads. Both of us sheltered and protected under the shadow by Khwaja Saheb. Acceptance. Blessing. Consent. Many there are who come away from Ajmer Sharif with their questions answered, their prayers fulfilled, their directions clarified. It is said that wonderful things happen at the Mazars of the Awliya' Allāh. "There's no cure but the taste of what the saints pass round!"

There is one sacred place in Ajmer Sharif that I did not visit because I did not even know about it till after my ziyarats. But when I went to South Africa in 2002 I saw a photo, the face of a waliullah. And that face was one of the most beautifully luminous faces I have ever seen. It was Hazrat Shah Mohamed Ibrahim Soofie. And his Mazar is in Ajmer Sharif, midway up the hill of Taragarh overlooking the Darbar of Khwaja Gharib Nawaz. His murids and devotees call him Shah Saheb.

Hazrat Shah Ibrahim was born in India in 1880, and was the eldest son of Soofie Saheb, the great Indian Saint who devoted many years of his life to establishing mosques and madrasas and orphanages throughout South Africa during the late 19th and early 20th centuries. Hazrat Shah Ibrahim's Pir-O-Murshid was Hazrat Shaykh Khwaja Habib Ali Shah of Hyderabad, Deccan. Shah Ibrahim's love of Khwaja Gharib Nawaz was so immense that he chose never to marry. He passed away at the age of 75 in 1955 and his humble Mazar, with its distinctive pale yellow Chishti-Nizami-Habibi dome, is said to be on the very site where Khwaja Saheb used to keep his horses. Shah Saheb never ever entered the Mazar Sharif of Khwaja Gharib Nawaz, the Saint whom he loved so much. He said that there were so many "visitors from the spiritual real" at the Mazar, if one could see them with the inner eye, the basira then one would "shudder to enter." Subhanallah! Shah Saheb would never enter because he could "see" the reality. Yet we ignorant blind ones, lost in illusion, try to get as close as we possibly can!

 *In the Darbar

The early hours of the morning in the Darbar of Khwaja Saheb. We are caught and crushed in the rush of ecstatic devotees. Delicate water of roses sprayed into the warm air, falling gently upon us in fine mists, filling our eyes, wetting our hair, our faces. Fragrance of the Sufi Saint. Dozens of hands reaching out. Longing to touch, to embrace the qawwals. Wanting a share of the blessings from this feast of spiritual music. Kissing their hands. Touching their feet. Outpourings of love. Hindustani faces bright with emotion. Tear filled eyes. Enraptured smiles. Wave after wave of devotion and admiration flows over the qawwals from Pakistan. I am pressed tightly behind the dervish qawwal, a lover of Khwaja Saheb. Other lovers of the Sufi Saint press forward to kiss and hug him. Placing his hand on their bowed heads, he transmits barkat and blessings. From the midst of the crowd a hand extends towards mine. Lips kiss my rings! No! Why such honour for me! Carried on this tide of emotion across the marble courtyard the dervish qawwal and I pause in front of the shining gilded doors of the Mazar. Whispered greetings and prayers offered to the Sufi Saint who rests within. May Allah Shower him with Mercy and Peace. Enveloped in the lingering scent of sacred red roses we both move from the crowd, leaving Haji Maqbool, the famous and charismatic qawwal, surrounded by his adoring fans. Silently we slip away into the intricate maze of narrow lanes outside the Dargah. This night's mehfil is over in the Darbar at Ajmer Sharif.

 Silent Sleepers*

Standing at the top of the stairs overlooking the expanse of the Darbar. Above us a velvety indigo canopy of Indian sky. Beneath us a rich carpet of intricately intertwined human forms spreading across the cool marble courtyard. Silently we descend. Softly our garments swish. Slightly our bracelets tinkle. Lightly and carefully we tread, weaving our way amongst the silent sleepers. Brilliantly coloured Rajasthani clothes subdued and softened under the serenity of the starlit night. Deep rhythmic breathing. Dreams hanging suspended in the air. Trust and devotion. Devotees and beggars. Mothers and babies. Faqirs and dervishes. Lovers of Khwaja Saheb. Lights of his Blessed Dome illuminating the two darknesses: the darkness of the night and the darkness of the human heart.
"Light the lamp of Love in the darkness of my heart, Ya Khwaja!"

 The tea-making faqir*

The sun has not yet risen over Ajmer Sharif though her rays are beginning to light the skies. Muffled sounds of stirring humanity. Fluttering of wings as the pigeons awake. A young faqir squats beside a small fire, patiently feeding twigs and sticks into the flames, absorbed in his task. His name is Chand meaning moon. Unexpectedly pale skin. Like silver amidst the burnished bronze faces of the other faqirs. Serene almond shaped eyes. Green-and-red turban. Wooden bracelets. Amber beads. Performing his spiritual duty. Giving food to all those who gather under the beautiful Moghul arches in this secluded and blessed corner of the Dargah Sharif.

The dervish qawwal and I have not slept. As soon as his mehfil finished we made our way through the quiet lanes and narrow alleys that radiate from and lead to the Mazar of the Saint. Stopping here and there for brief exchanges of greetings or the inevitable cup of chai. Now our pleasure is to sit with new friends, these faqirs and qalandars, malangs and dervishes, in the world but not of the world, amongst other solitary travellers, lovers of the Sufi Saint.

I have no rules or regulations,

Nor heart nor religion –

Only I remain, and you, sitting in the corner,

And the wealth of Poverty.

The fire burns brightly. Milk and water start to boil in a large pot. I am enchanted by this young tea-maker. Devoted to his important job. Totally centred and focused. Whispering blessings and remembrances as he measures out and sprinkles sugar and tea leaves. The love with which this tea is being prepared! Surely it will intoxicate us! Chand pours steaming hot chai into dozens of tiny cups. Carefully he watches the two older faqirs as they distribute our blessed breakfast, making sure that each and every one of the awakened sleepers has received his share. Somehow I feel so perfectly at ease, at home in this corner, across the seas, faraway from my birthplace, one white woman amidst this strange array of Indian men. But always and everywhere I am safe and protected in the company of the dervish qawwal.

Slipping on our shoes we descend the crowded stairs and enter the congested stream of passing humanity as they struggle to reach or depart from the Dargah Sharif. It is almost impossible to move forwards through the crush in the bazaar that surrounds the Dargah. So we resign ourselves to being pushed and jostled, squashed and trodden upon. But, this is Urs and Khwaja's lovers have come from far and wide to participate in the festivities. Here we learn patience allowing compassion and joy to flow. This is not the place or time for complaint or anger.

Moving away from the Khwaja's court towards the hills. A brother from the Darbar wants to take us somewhere on the outskirts of town, a rendezvous with someone. Gradually the crowd lessens, thins out and walking becomes easier. Quietly we talk. An infinite black sky opening above us. Pebbles and gravel crushing lightly under our feet.

The mountain upon which stands Taragarh Fort towers silently above us as we wind our way along the dirt tracks amongst the camps of the poor lovers and faqirs. Glowing fires amongst the scrub and low trees light our way in the darkness. Makeshift shelters. Ragged children excited with curiosity run to us, holding our hands, our clothes, staring up into our faces through the blackness of night trying to make out the features of the strange white lady and the even stranger dervish qawwal.

We move further into the darkness. Whispered salaams as we pass groups of men, huddled together, their large heavy lidded surma-circled eyes penetrating the darkness through a veil of pungent smoke. Lost in their dreams, their visions. Reaching another shelter enveloped in the yellow glow of lamplight our friend from the Darbar disappears into the shadowy scrub beyond. We sip steaming sweet chai and wait. The smell of warm earth as the moon rises into the starry night. Opposite, under a low tree, an ancient woman in tatters has spread her merchandise on a cloth. With hennaed fingers she moves her prayer beads, softly reciting praises of her Lord. We squat to examine her wares. We choose two items. I select a delicate tasbeeh of tiny smoky grayish-brown glass beads shot through with gleaming lights of yellow, and mehmoos gathers some contorted roots of a medicinal plant. Our friend emerges from his shadowy meeting. We turn to retrace our steps back to the Darbar.

Ya Khwaja! Sitting in the dust at the end of a track under the mysterious presence of a huge mountain, one ancient woman, selling prayer beads and herbal remedies in the dark. Ya Khwaja! What a marvellous array of lovers you invite!

 *The lovers of Khwaja Saheb

The streets were deserted as we sat quietly drinking chai in the pre-dawn hours. Mehmood's mood was utterly serious. We had just finished a mehfil in the Darbar. The intoxication was still clinging to him.

Suddenly he asked passionately, "Tell me? Who are the lovers of Khwaja Saheb? Tell me? The khadims or the qawwals? Who?"

I looked into the eyes of this gentle qawwal.

Again his emphatic question, "Tell me? Who are the true lovers of Khwaja Saheb?" My eyes filled with tears.

"The qawwals," I whispered in reply, qualifying my answer with, "Some qawwals!"

"No! All qawwals. Not some qawwals. All qawwals are the lovers of Khwaja Saheb!"

I am tongue tied and humbled to the depths. He is a true lover of Khwaja Saheb, a true slave of Allāh, in his essence, whilst I just carry the name Slave of Allāh without being in total submission and surrender.

"All qawwals are the lovers of Khwaja Saheb."

A divinely inspired qawwal is a true lover of Khwaja Saheb. Qawwali is an ocean of Divine Beauty in which he drowns again and again, each moment being given new life. Qawwali is a fire of 'ishq in which he burns like the phoenix only to be raised from the ashes to sing more songs of inexpressible yearning.

"All qawwals are the lovers of Khwaja Saheb!"

And a Botswanan Connection

The Saints of the Chishti Silsila connect people. They bring people together in the most unexpected places, even in faraway Botswana.

On my visit to Botswana in 2002 my hosts took me on a brief excursion to a beautiful citrus orchard in the middle of the flat scrubby terrain outside the village with the tongue-catching name of Molepolole. After strolling through the orange and lemon and mandarin trees we entered a deserted farmhouse and climbed the stairs. As I stood in the large empty upstairs room, with high thatched roof and polished wooden floors, I exclaimed, "What a perfect place for qawwali!" I was already visualizing Haji Maqbool and Mehmood with their musicians and many enraptured lovers lost in the music. "Insha'Allah one day we will have a qawwali mehfil here."

My daydreaming was interrupted by the sound of footsteps on the stairs. We turned to greet a young man. He knew I was visiting the orchard and had come especially to meet me. After being introduced he kept looking carefully at my face. I smiled, somewhat disconcerted by the intensity of his gaze. He returned my smile his eyes wide and bright with amazement.

“I know you!” he said excitedly. “Yes! I know you!”

His statement bewildered my hosts and me too. I had never seen this stranger before.

“I know you! I saw you in Ajmer Sharif at the Urs in 1999. You were sitting with the Sabri Brothers at their qawwali mehfil outside the Mazar of Khwaja Saheb!”

Here in the wilds of Botswana, an unexpected meeting to be sure, connected and brought together by the blessings of Khwaja Gharib Nawaz.

Leaving Ajmer Sharif was a sad experience. The ten days of our visit had been exhilarating, passionate and exhaustingly joyous. We wanted to stay. There is a powerful Sabri qawwali called Aap ki khatir apno ko chora, the poetry written by Omar Daraz, a nephew of Haji Maqbool and Mehmood. “I have turned from everything in this world and left it all because of you, but I will never let go of your shirt, Ya Khwaja.” That is how we felt. However we would now have to return to the world. But we would always be clinging to the darman, the shirt of Khwaja Gharib Nawaz.

Our last ziyarat to the Mazar was filled with subdued yearning. We were all visibly sad. Our actions, our slow footsteps, our moist eyes betrayed the aching of our hearts. Standing again beside the Sultan-ul-Hind offering our last salaams and supplications, whilst our khadims performed the final ceremony. Long thin strips of brilliant cerise pink cotton cloth were gently rubbed on the Mazar and then tied around the heads of each member of our party – Haji Maqbool, Mehmood and their musicians and qawwals. Another wider piece of orange and cerise and black cloth, the distinctive Rajasthani chundri, was rubbed upon the Mazar and then softly placed over my head. These cerise headbands are the symbol of the devotees’ departure from the Urs. Haji Maqbool and Mehmood were then blessed with the gift of two chadars directly from the Mazar Sharif – green and gold chadars. One of them now rests, here in Pakistan, on our shelf together with the blessed chadars from Hazrat Nizamuddin Awliya and Baba Fariduddin Ganj-i Shakar.

After our poignant farewell and last glances at the Darbar, trying to take in and retain all that beauty and joy, we descended the hill back to our packed luggage. In the meeting room at Wali Manzil our khadims present us with many small bags of tabarruk, blessed sweets, sacred threads and fragrant rosepetals, to be distributed amongst the group for their families and friends back in Pakistan.

Throughout our time at the Urs I often heard the words, “Thank you so much. Our big thanks to you Amatullah, the Australian lady, it is you who brought the Sabri Brothers to the Urs again!” But I hadn’t done anything. It was all Khwaja Gharib Nawaz’s doing. He had invited us and we came. He had called us and we answered.

The magic of the Urs clung to us, enveloping and protecting us amidst the utter chaos of Ajmer railway station with its mass of humanity and mountains of baggage.

Ajmer Sharif seemed to be before our eyes throughout the long slow haul back to Delhi. We had left Ajmer Sharif but our spirits were still high because before returning to Pakistan we planned to stay near the Mazar of Hazrat Nizamuddin Awliya for just a few days. Not wanting to be torn away from the Chishti Saints.

The experience of being present at a Sabri mehfil in a Darbar filled with devotees is overwhelming. I have already described the joy, elation, ecstasy and extreme bliss of such gatherings. But perhaps it is even more overwhelming when there aren't any devotees in attendance and the Sabri Brothers sing purely and solely for the Saint himself. Actually all qawwals are in reality singing for the Saint even when there are countless devotees present at a Darbar. However, I felt the intensity of the connection between the Sabri Brothers and the Saint more acutely is the stillness of a deserted Mazar, the immense love they have for the Saint, and the passion and longing in their voices and music. I have tasted the spiritual sweetness of such mehfiles on several occasions in India at the Mazars of the Chishti Saints.

On each of our journeys to India whilst in Delhi we have made ziyarat to the Mazar of Hazrat Qutbuddin Bakhtiyar Kaki and each visit has been well after midnight. On one such ziyarat we all squeezed into a hired van and travelling rapidly through Delhi's near deserted streets quickly reached the entrance to the Darbar. Faqirs and devotees were sleeping on the sides of the long path leading up to the Mazar. Some watched us through glazed eyes as we passed whilst others reached out their hands for money. One small group of men sitting solemnly with lighted candles recited verses of the Holy Qur'an over the body of a recently departed soul.

It was too late for us to enter the tranquil Mazar, which is set in the middle of a walled "meadow". Yet we reached the "Deorhi" gate leading to the courtyard and here we sat for many minutes of silent prayer and meditation. There were only six or seven other devotees present at that early hour. The harmoniums and tabla and dholak were placed amongst some slender columns facing the shining "Deorhi" gate and then, for an hour Haji Maqbool and Mehmood softly sang in honour of, and for the pleasure of Hazrat Qutbuddin Kaki, their words and gestures directed beyond the gleaming gate to his sanctified presence.

Hazrat Khwaja Qutbuddin Bakhtiyar Kaki was born in 569 AH in a town called Awash in Transoxania. He belonged to the direct lineage of the Holy Prophet Muhammad through Hazrat Imam Husain. He was named Qutbuddin Bakhtiyar. When he was seventeen-years of age he met Khwaja Mu'inuddin Chishti who, instantly perceiving his immense spiritual receptivity and preparedness, initiated him into the Chishti Silsila. In the following years both undertook extensive individual journeys and eventually reunited briefly in Multan. However Hazrat Qutbuddin soon departed from Multan, which was under the spiritual jurisdiction of the Suhrawardi Master Shaykh Baha'uddin Zakariya. The Sufi Masters had great respect for each other's areas of activity and one Sufi Master would not intrude upon the territory of another Master.

Hazrat Qutbuddin proceeded to Delhi where the Sultan Iltamish received him with great warmth offering him official postings, urging him to stay close to the Sultan's court. But Hazrat Qutbuddin was a man of severe asceticism and adhered strictly to the Chishtis' code of distancing themselves from government and court affairs. Nevertheless a time came when the intrigues in Delhi, instigated by a jealous government-appointed cleric with the title Shaykh al-Islam, began making trouble for Hazrat Qutbuddin. This distressing situation prompted Khwaja Gharib Nawaz to visit Delhi with the intention of bringing his khalifa back to Ajmer, but the entire city of Delhi became grief-stricken at the thought of losing Hazrat Qutbuddin. Khwaja Saheb was deeply moved by this display of love and loyalty so allowed his khalifa to remain.

Hazrat Qutbuddin and his family lived under extremely frugal conditions and often he was forced, by necessity, to borrow money from a grocer to buy food. However, he detested borrowing and one day resolved never to do so again. From that time onwards a small piece of bread, kak, appeared under his prayer mat every day. And from this miracle he was given the title Kaki.

Hazrat's life was one of both extreme austerity and extreme ecstasy for he was a great lover of sama' and often fell into rapture during the audition of qawwali. His soul, like a yearning bird trapped within a cage, would take wing and ascend to the highest spiritual realms in his ecstasy. And it is in this manner that the great Chishti Saint passed away – in ecstasy. At a mehfil-e sama' the qawwals sang a couplet from the Divan of Shaykh Ahmad-i Jam:

*“All those who by the sword of submission are killed;
each moment from the Unseen with new life are filled.”*

Hazrat Qutbuddin was instantly transported in his rapture. So overwhelmed was he that he had to be carried home, all the while the qawwals repeated those intoxicating verses. For four days and nights the qawwals kept repeating the same couplet. Each time the first line was sung Hazrat would fall down, and when the second couplet was sang he would immediately rise again. For four days and nights he remained in ecstasy. Then on the fifth night, the 14th Rabi al-Awwal 633 AH (1235) Hazrat Khwaja Qutbuddin Bakhtiyar Kaki passed away and returned to his Beloved.

He was buried in a meadow outside of Delhi because at one time, when he had passed by this meadow, he had paused and said, “This earth has the fragrance of hearts!” His tranquil Mazar rests in the midst of this “fragrant” meadow in Mehrauli, now a highly urbanized area of Delhi.

Our private after-midnight mehfal at the Mazar of Hazrat Qutbuddin Kaki was gentler, sweeter and more touching than usual. Haji Maqbool and Mehmood sang with so much love and restrained passion. Perhaps this delicate and tender mood, which enveloped the Sabris and the few of us who were present, was emanating from the Saint himself. The Chishti Saint who had returned to his Beloved during the qawwali.

Close to the beautiful Jami Mosque in the old city of Delhi is the discreet Mazar of Shaykh Kaleemullah Chishti. Born into the illustrious family of gifted architects who built splendours such as the Taj Mahal, the Jami Mosque and the Red Fort, Shaykh Kaleemullah was educated at the finest madrasas and colleges. Yet, one day his life changed. He was smitten with love for a maid who cared not in the least for him. So desperate was he that he fled to a majzub and implored him to pray that she too would love him as he did her! The following day the maid displayed great affection but it was too late! The majzub had filled Shaykh Kaleemullah's heart with yearning for Divine Love. His spiritual journey then began. The majzub sent him to Shaykh Yahya Madani in Madina who initiated him into the Chishti Silsila. He quickly traversed the stages of the spiritual journey and was granted the robes of succession, khilafat, by Shaykh Yahya who sent him back to the Mughal capital, Delhi, to work for the Silsila. He set up his home, khanqah and madrasa in a busy market area directly between the Jami Mosque and the Red Fort. Here he initiated numerous men and women into the Chishti Silsila, many of them Hindus who were not compelled to leave their religion. Shaykh Kaleemullah wrote several treatises on medicine and astrology and his two most acclaimed works on Sufi theory and practice, Muraqqa' (The Patchwork Robe) and Kashkul (The Begging Bowl) hold distinguished positions within the Chishti Silsila. Shaykh Kaleemullah passed away in 1142 AH (1729 AD) and was buried within his humble khanqah, midway between the two architectural glories of Mughal Delhi.

The gates were padlocked when we arrived at the Mazar of Shaykh Kaleemullah around two in the morning. However, even though there was no obvious entry we were not deterred. We kept looking for a way in. Near a side gate we discovered a very tiny opening, only big enough for one person to slither and slide through. So, one by one the Sabris and myself slithered and slid through dragging harmoniums and tabla behind us. A few devotees who were sleeping inside the Darbar awoke and sat in readiness for the qawwali. But, the qawwals had come for the Saint and they were singing purely for him. The devotees just happened to be there too. Sitting beneath a tree with stars shining overhead Haji Maqbool and Mehmood sang for Shaykh Kaleemullah Chishti. Then we departed by the way we came – out through the slot!

A solitary mehfil at the Mazar of Hazrat Inayat Khan, Mehmood sang alone. Only he and I were physically present with the Saint. I had been urging Mehmood to make ziyarat with me having told him something of this Saint's greatness, that he was a gifted musician who had taken the Sufi Message to the West at the beginning of the twentieth century.

Apparently, whilst on a visit to Delhi, only weeks before his passing away, Hazrat Inayat Khan was surveying, from a watchtower, the Darbar of Hazrat Nizamuddin Awliya. He remarked to his companion, Khwaja Hasan Nizami, that he felt at peace and happy in this place. When Khwaja Nizami responded that he was most welcome to stay, Hazrat Inayat said, “Yes, when I come I will stay forever!” And so he did!

In the still of the afternoon, when the lanes were enveloped in the lazy hours of siesta, Mehmood and I walked a short distance from the Darbar of Nizamuddin Awliya to the Sufi Centre and Mazar of Hazrat Inayat Khan. The garden and courtyard were empty. We climbed the stairs to where the Saint lay. After our salaams and du'as Mehmood sat right next to the Mazar directly facing the Saint. I sat very nearby. Then Mehmood sang. It was extremely moving, utterly tranquil. For three or four minutes he sang his song purely and solely for Hazrat Inayat Khan. So simple and spontaneous! Mehmood didn't even have his harmonium. Just his voice!

a nightingale's song...
No. It is the Voice* of the Rose.”

On this morning in October 1999 there are many visitors in the hujra, small chamber of Pir Iqbal Nizami, Sajjada Nashin of the Mazar of Hazrat Nizamuddin Awliya. Outside the windows is the Baoli, a large stone pool or reservoir filled with water in which many children are now frolicking. The Baoli was constructed under the directions of Hazrat Nizamuddin and there is a miracle told about its construction. The King, who was a severe adversary of Hazrat, tried to prevent the construction of the pool. He prohibited all masons and labourers to work on it and he even forbade the sale of oil for lamps in order to prevent the work continuing into the night. All the murids and khalifas worked throughout seven days and nights to construct the reservoir. Following Hazrat's instructions they inserted wicks into earthen bowls filled with water and lit them. To everyone's amazement the wicks burned brightly in the water, without any oil. And so the construction was completed.

At the end of the hujra is the grave of Pir Saheb's father, covered with a yellow chadar and fresh rosepetals. There are many prayers and words of consultation and advice for the many devotees and visitors. Gradually the hujra empties as each request is attended to. Mehmood and I are alone with Pir Saheb and his scribe. We had been hoping for these long-awaited moments of spiritual converse. The fragrance of red roses wafts through the small chamber. Quiet footsteps of devotees echo along the marble corridors. Outside the window the high-pitched voices of the children in the Baoli and the sound of splashing water. Pir Saheb smiles gently and utters softly spoken words of immense importance. We drink tiny cups of sweet chai and eat fresh dates. An intimate celebration, a tranquil scene witnessed by the great saint Hazrat Nizamuddin and his devoted murid Amir Khusrau who both rest so very near to us. Quickly Mehmood and I go to their Mazars to offer our salaams, give thanks and make our du'as.

Our last night in Delhi, the night of our departure, our return to Pakistan. Not wanting to leave. Longing to stay, clinging to Nizamuddin Awliya! Our numerous bags, suitcases, harmoniums, dholaks, tablas are carried downstairs and piled onto the roadside to await the vans that will take us to the Delhi Central Railway Station. My heart is utterly contracted. Tears go inwards. Hidden from view. Members of the group sit around or wander up and down the street. Waiting. Smoking.

There is still time for one last ziyarat to the Mazar of Nizamuddin Awliya so I hurry alone through the darkening street. I pass that old dervish in the corridor, the dervish with the heavily surma-circled eyes, the one whose glance is piercing. I quickly squat in front of him seeking his du'as. A gleam of light flashes from his deep eyes, gentle and so loving, and the hint of a smile. Within the Darbar it is tranquil. My agitation subsides. The Saint's tenderness envelops each soul who comes to him. I sit at his door, as close as any woman is permitted to go in this realm.

"I have not found one living person to whom I can pour out what is in my heart. Only you Nizamuddin. Only you. I sit at your feet. Clinging to your shirt. Silent language. Beyond words. Almost beyond thought. Pure yearning. Pure heartbreak. Only you Nizamuddin. Only you."

My forehead rests against the cool marble and my fingers interlace the delicate filigree. Slowly I repeat the word, "Istiqamat. Istiqamat. Istiqamat!" Steadfastness! Steadfastness! Steadfastness!

The story is told how one night the young murid Nizamuddin Awliya was keeping watch at the door of his Pir-O-Murshid Baba Fariduddin Ganj-i Shakar who was in deep meditation and prayer. Nizamuddin looked inside the cell at the precise moment of a descent of spiritual ecstasy upon the Saint. Seizing the blessed opportunity Nizamuddin boldly placed his request before his Murshid knowing that his entreaty would be granted because of the extreme ecstasy. "Istiqamat!" he cried. "Granted!" came the reply from his rapturous Master. In later years Hazrat Nizamuddin was to state that he wished he had asked his Murshid Baba Farid to grant him a different request – rather than asking for istiqamat, steadfastness in spiritual endeavour, he should have asked to pass away in ecstasy during the qawwali audition.

My tears have dried. The fragrance of roses and the soft murmuring of devotees in zikr. My last ziyarat during this journey to India. The breeze is cool and my heart is at peace.

I hear soft footsteps beside me. It is Mehmood. "Subhanallah!" he whispers and then beckons for me to come. We join the group, climb into the van and go to the train that will take us back to Lahore. Soon the journey to India will be over. But our hearts will always remain with Khwaja Gharib Namaz and the Chishti Saints because all of us are - "Khwaja Ki Diwani."

 *Ya Qalandar!

Sitting inside my friend's home, tasbeeh in hand, reciting my zikr in the Month of Ramazan. The familiar sound of a drum! Ahh! Surely it is a bandarwala. I go to the door and listen. Drum beats getting louder. Moments later two scruffy bandarwalas with a bear, a goat and a monkey, stroll past at a distance in front of the house. I want to greet them. But they haven't yet seen me, so they start walking away. Oh! Don't go! Come closer with your music and your strange pets! Mental connection. One turns. Sees me.

“Ya! Qalandar!” they call to me. I smile. “Ya Ali!” they cry. “Ya Ali!” I echo. The men are young, gray and grubby but with such beautiful smiles under the grime. I stand at the gate, watching them ramble towards me. Bear shuffling alongside. Goat strutting in proud goat fashion. Monkey jumping and climbing onto his master’s shoulder. One young man blows into the old piped instrument, the shantai, with its tattered coloured tassels dangling and swaying. Such a poignant sound! So sad, whether here on the dusty seaside in Karachi, or in the mists of the Scottish Highlands. The other young man beats on his drum. I love this sound. Dhamal! The intoxicated dance at the Sufi Mazars during Urs festivals. “Ya Qalandar!” I pass money to them. “Ya Ali! Ya Ali!” Smiles and salaams. Then this strange band of misfits moves off through the deserted streets of fashionable Seaview, hoping to earn a few rupees with their music, their bear, their goat and their monkey. So often these bandarwalas are treated with contempt or disgust. Are these street urchins addicted to sniffing solvents? I don’t know, but still, “Ya Qalandar!” “Ya Ali!”

 *Ship of the Desert

It is mid afternoon at the end of Ramazan and we are stuck in our Suzuki van in a traffic jam in Bander Road. The pollution is suffocating. Tempers are high. Patience is at a minimum. Karachi’s monotonous symphony. The incessant tooting of bikes and cars. The highly disagreeable and intensely irritating noise of bus horns, blasting the surrounding chaos with a sound so objectionable as to create turmoil and pain in the solar plexus. We wait patiently, our van creeping forward inch by inch towards our destination – a recording studio in the heart of Saddar.

A little ahead of us, standing aloof in the midst of humanity’s madness – one majestic camel, striding forwards with such nobility, pulling his loaded cart. The perfect image of serenity and detachment.

“Look at that beautiful camel! So cool and calm. Not caring about dunya. Undisturbed by all of it. Doing his job. Not complaining. Pulling the load that has been given to him by his master. But look! He’s not here. He is with Allāh. He’s looking up, not down. It’s the same to him whether he is in crazy Karachi or the solitude of the Sahara Desert. He’s above all of it. In the world not of the world. Oh! To be like that! We must try to remember this camel.”

 *Brief encounter

We are on our way to Lahore by train for a recording session. The dervish qawwal sleeps soundly in the middle bunk. I am restless. I can no longer lie in that bottom coffin that they call a berth. I am dreadfully uncomfortable, but am so used to discomfort by now. In the lower AC carriages of Pakistani trains there is never room to sit straight if the middle bunk is in use. So I sit, crouched forwards, elbows resting on knees, chin resting in hands, observing the goings-on around me. Still many hours of travel left. I am the only woman in a carriage full of men. Surrounded by Pakistanis, sleeping, chatting, chewing pan, playing cards or simply waiting patiently to reach their destinations. No one reads books here. The sad truth of being a writer in Pakistan!

Quite nearby are two young European men – physical travellers, complete with rucksacks, sleeping bags and the usual hitchhiker trappings. One of them writes in his diary. He raises his head often, collecting his thoughts and then returns to his notes. I hear snippets of their conversation. How nice to hear English spoken! They make me smile with hidden laughter at their funny observations of the strange happenings on the train. I recall being similarly intrigued and amazed at the spectacle of my first train journey through Pakistan – a grueling 30 hours from Rawalpindi to Karachi in mid summer. But it's all so familiar and commonplace now. No more charm, just discomfort and copious cups of Pakistan Railways chai and ... waiting to get to where I am going!!

So I sit with these young men, drawn together by our common language. I talk to them about Islam and Tasawwuf and qawwali and how I now live here in the east. They are genuinely astounded that a white woman should become Muslim and then give up everything in the west to start afresh in Pakistan. At times this also astounds me!

We pass the time with exchanges of tales. On hearing my voice my companion stirs from sleep in his middle bunk, turns to check that I am okay, smiles and then plunges back into his dream realm. How I envy his ability to simply switch off and sleep through the monotony of the long haul to Lahore!

Before disembarking at our destination one of the young Europeans gives me his card but unfortunately I lost it soon afterwards outside the Darbar of Data Saheb.

As we approached the Darbar an inner voice was telling me to put my bag under my coat, to conceal and protect it. I heard but did not heed. I ignored the inner sign and so, within only minutes my wallet had been stolen from my exposed bag by some of those ragged little street urchins hanging around the outskirts of the Mazar. There had been quite a lot of money inside by Pakistani standards, plus a five hundred deutsche mark note and also the card of the young man from the train. Pity. He was a nice young man and I should have liked to keep in touch with him. Not to care.

We stood beside the Mazar bathed in the intoxicating fragrance of red roses, whispering salaams and recitations, seeking blessings. After hot sweet chai we drove back through the still quiet streets of Lahore. But I wonder what those ragamuffins did with a five hundred deutsche mark note!

* Memories of a brief friendship

The 11th day of September, 2001. I have just offered sunset prayer in my room at the Dreamland Motel in Islamabad. Looking out at the beautiful Margala Hills, silhouetted serenely against the darkening sky, I exhale a breath of immense relief and joy. My journey and mission have been successful. Tomorrow I shall return to the Indian High Commission to collect our visas. Chaotic and polluted Karachi is left behind. Ahead lie mystical Delhi and blessed Ajmer Sharif. As in a dream I stand at the window in Dreamland Motel, lost in my sweet memories of our previous ziyarats to Hazrat Nizamuddin and Khwaja Gharib Nawaz. Filled with intense longing. Pervaded by a delicate sadness. The dervish qawwal is still in Karachi. We shall meet in Lahore in two days. Insha'Allah! Impulsively I pick up the phone and make a call to a new friend, eager to discuss the progress of our plans for the qawwali group's proposed tour of the States. "Amatullah! Turn on your television! Everything has changed. Everything has changed! Turn on your television and you will see what I mean." Is this a dream? Is this a new disaster movie? What is this amazing spectacle unfolding before my eyes on a television screen in the peacefulness of an Islamabad evening? Two planes. Twin towers. The World Trade Center in New York City, symbol of the Capitalist world, crashing to the ground. "Everything has changed!"

The 26th day of November, 2001. Yes my new friend for such a brief time! "Everything has changed." Today I received a phone call from A telling me of your passing from this world into the next realm of consciousness. And, I had just sent you an email, only a few hours before. But, you were already gone, though I didn't know. Maybe our plans to take the qawwals on a tour of the States will manifest one day. Pity you won't be here to enjoy the spectacle. May the abode in which you dwell be filled with light! I pray for you now. I didn't when you were in this world. Strange! "Everything has changed."

The 26th day of January, 2002. Today we visited his grave. It was a pilgrimage for A. She loved him so much. Bagh-e-Khorasan. A peaceful, clean and tidy enclosed graveyard – unusual for Karachi. Pale green surrounding walls, lawns and dozens of tall shady trees on the outskirts. A Shia graveyard. Hundreds of eagles circled high above the Mewa Shah Qabristan. Specks of black, swooping and soaring, sailing freely on the wind, like floating black paper. In front of us the pale silver nearly full moon in the soft blue sky. The flaming setting sun behind us. Quietly we covered his grave with armfuls of fragrant red roses – whispering prayers and blessings on the Prophet. A looked so beautiful. Head bowed. Eyes closed. Slender hand resting tenderly on the grave. A strong communication between two spiritual friends. S and I were planning to take the Sabri Brothers to the States. And now, here he lies in the Mewa Shah Qabristan, where, every Thursday night the Sabris sing at the nearby Mazar of Zahir Shah Taji Baba. Maybe one day my dream to take Sabris to USA will manifest!

* Sketch of Karachi

Clifton Beach, Karachi. Eid day. March 2001. We drive along the seaside boulevard, now teeming with the people of the suburbs, coming and going to and from the distant low tide waters of the bay. Camels, Palomero horses, chai and sweet vendors, women bedecked in mirrored, laced, ribboned, shining, sparkling garments. Outfits ranging from the gawdy and the discreet to the full burqa, ornate gold costume jewelry at throat, wrists, ears, nose, ankles, fingers. Overdone, but part of this culture. Figures silhouetted on the water's edge. Movement and noise. The mingled aromas of salt water and steaming hot chai. All is activity. The inhabitants of the world are in restless motion on this festival day. The earth is at rest, at peace beneath the humans who move across her surface in a ceaseless dance.

Directing our gaze to the far horizon we watch the flaming red ball sinking into the ocean. Perfect sphere. Sublime Beauty. Radiant Sun. Instinctively I turn my head and look behind us. There on the opposite horizon is another ball. This one is cool, silvery yellow and passive, tranquil. Full moon on the ascent, reflecting and transmitting the light of the descending flaming orb that she faces. Heart transmits the light of the spirit to the darkness of the soul. Moon transmits the light of the Sun to the darkness of the night. “And We shall show you Our signs on the horizons and in your own selves until you know that He is the Real.” (Qur'an Sharif)

“I've only ever seen this once before.” The dervish qawwal smokes as I relate the story. “In Australia about 17 years ago. I was on a beach on an island off the coast of Queensland. It was nearly sunset. I watched the sun growing redder and redder as it approached the horizon. As it was setting a small flock of huge birds, pelicans, you know they have big beaks where they store fish and other food. These big birds flew past me, but not towards the sun. They were flying in the opposite direction. I remember saying to my companion, ‘Why don't they fly towards the sun?’ I turned to see where they were flying. Subhanallah! There was the silver moon, full and splendid. It was making its ascent into the evening sky. So beautiful! And these big birds were flying to greet it. I still remember the soft sound of their huge wings as they flew past. Wise birds. Wise pelicans.”

Our speed increases as we move along the boulevard. Darkening sky. Time for prayer. The setting sun. The crimson sphere, symbol of the Spirit, sinks into the Ocean of Divine Mercy. Dervish qawwal by my side. Eating pan. Surma on eyes. Fragrant with itr. He looks to the West and bids his farewell to the day's sun. “Allāh Hafiz.” Man of simplicity and hidden wisdom. Faqiri wisdom. We turn the corner and head back towards the city. Eid is nearly over.

* The King and the ant.

There is a story about a mighty King and an ant. The King stands at the top of his well, an immense well that goes deep, deep into the earth. He looks into his well, throws a pebble and waits to hear the distant echoing “plop”. In a state of reverie and inner calm this mighty King contemplates his life, feeling well content and pleased.

Gazing abstractedly into the depths, lost in daydreams, his attention is awakened and caught by one tiny black ant who is slowly yet determinedly climbing the inside wall of the well. The ant is carrying a piece of food and he is looking upwards towards the speck of light above – the top of the well, his goal, his destination. Slowly he climbs, suffering fatigue and pain. Step after step. Pain and more pain. Tiredness and oh! the weight of his load!

“Onwards and Upwards! Onwards and Upwards! Onwards and Upwards!” chants the little ant. His mother taught him these magic words.

The mighty King keeps watching his tiny ant as he nears the top of the well. The goal is within reach. It is so close. The light above is radiant. It dazzles him. He is nearly there. Then ... he loses his grip and ... falls...falls...falls... back down to the ledge at the bottom of the well.

Silence. The deafening silence at the bottom of the well. There lies the little ant. Motionless. The lump of food is close beside him on the ground. O dear! Right back to where he started. Bewildered and bruised but, the goal is still ahead.

“Onwards and Upwards! Onwards and Upwards! My mother told me to say, Onwards and Upwards!”

The King keeps watching. With patience and trust the tiny little black ant picks up his load and once again starts climbing the inside wall of the well to the light at the top. Slowly, slowly and then ... just when the goal is within reach, “Ahh!” He slips and falls – again, down to the depths. Into the abyss. Again, the silence.

Many times he tries to reach the light. His yearning never fades. It actually increases. “I must reach! I must reach! This is my reason for living. This is my purpose in life! I must reach that light! Onwards and Upwards.”

The King is attentive. His eyes do not blink. Slowly his heart softens and melts as he witnesses this amazing spectacle. A spectacle taking place in the darkness of a deep huge well! The spectacle of the private struggle and intense yearning of one tiny black ant to reach the light!

Once again he is climbing, steadily, patiently. The King smiles sweetly. How he loves this ant! Then, gently and with the utmost tenderness the mighty King reaches his arm into the well. Without pondering or questioning or wondering how or why, the little trusting ant climbs onto the King’s finger and ... is lifted high, high into the air.

Onwards and Upwards.

Into the sunlight. Into the cool breeze.

One tiny black ant sitting on the fragrant arm of his beloved King.

*The Majzub

Many times I saw him, sitting on the side of the road or in an alleyway. Very close to our home in this congested colony. Covered from head toe in dust. His hair was long and matted. He wore only a pair of trousers. He would always be smoking as he sat in the middle of a circle of hundreds of cigarette butts. No one ever bothered him and I don’t suppose he ever bothered anyone. I wanted to give him something, money or food. But was unsure if I should. He was lost to this world. One night Mehmood placed a bag of biryana in front of him but he just stared at it, uncomprehendingly. Sitting like a dusty Buddha, with dark glazed eyes. He's gone now. I haven't seen him for maybe a year or more. Disappeared into the dust!

* Stark Reality

Surrounded by poverty. People in need with outstretched upturned palms. O Allah! What to do? How can I not give? I have to write the next book. Now I no longer have enough money to buy a computer. So much poverty!

But, there is the fear that with time one may become immune to the conditions of surrounding humanity. To see, every day, the beggars waiting at every intersection, to hear, morning and night, the cries of the hungry seeking food, yet to always look with fresh eyes and listen with fresh ears so that the heart may not become hardened!

“Why do you give them money?” some ask me. “This is mafia organized. The bosses live out in the country, fat and happy. They round up all beggars and deformed and limbless people and put them on these intersections. All the money goes to the mafia!”

“Allāh Knows! I just give.”

I never saw Mehmood refuse any outstretched hand.

* Between two worlds

Living in limbo. The indeterminate state between two worlds, two cultures. A lonely place indeed! Belonging neither to this country nor that country. No longer an Australian but never able to become a total Pakistani. I have great affection for both worlds yet I belong neither here nor there. And now I am unable to return to my so-called homeland because there's nothing to return to, except perhaps the gum trees and glorious expanse of golden deserted beaches. At times I yearn for the freedom to walk along the northern shore like we did in the past. Not another soul to be seen or heard, just the surf and the salty spray and the wet sand and a pure contentment in the moment. Thank Allāh for the experience.

But I cannot go back to that. I would be miserable and would yearn for the freedom of Karachi's chaos! Yes, there is a freedom here too, the freedom to lose oneself in the multitudes. Riding in a rickshaw through the polluted city streets I catch those fleeting passing images of humanity, images of pathos and joy and dignity and impoverishment that flood my heart with an intense love. Thank Allāh for the experience.

Last night we were at a gathering. The inevitable segregation of men and women! How I loathe it! Crammed into one tiny room with a single ceiling fan we women are supposed to be spiritually uplifted by the qawwali that we are condemned to watch on a small video screen as it is relayed from the men's area. An intolerable situation for me! However on this occasion the qawwals too are suffering in their confined space under the intense heat of video lights. Yet my Pakistani sisters are well content. From birth they have been taught to observe such segregation so they accept it unquestioningly. They are happy and yes, they really are spiritually uplifted as they watch the qawwals on the small video screen. But after several hours of enduring the heat I escape from the constricting conditions, to push aside the curtain of purdah and stand under the night sky and stars feeling the breeze on my damp skin, breathing in the freedom of being momentarily alone! How perfect the qawwali would have been out here in the coolness of evening! Thank Allāh for the experience.

I have been observing the servant and the one who is served, the slave and the master. And it struck me, when I was watching a young man massaging the legs of an older man, that the one who was serving actually had so much more dignity, so much more grace than the one who was reclining. There is such subtle nobility surrounding the servant. This culture is filled with servants and slaves and the ones they serve, their masters or elders. It's not like that in the West where we all seem to do everything for ourselves. Or if someone is going to massage your tired legs then you'll have to pay by the hour! When I read the saying of Hazrat Nizamuddin Awliya, "The slave becomes the master" I thought perhaps it was indicating this nobility of the slave/servant.

 *The Eclipse

A peaceful afternoon in the quiet colony, everyone is sleeping, the time of siesta. But neither of us is sleepy so we relax and talk and drink chai. A breeze starts to blow. The sky darkens, getting darker and darker. We stand at the window and watch. Soon the afternoon is plunged in the mysterious atmosphere of an eclipse. Silence descends upon the colony. In the grey stillness, as we behold the celestial miracle, Mehmood softly starts to sing a Hamd, a song in Praise of Allāh. Gently, tenderly the words flow, serene yet majestic. Gradually the sky becomes brighter as the radiant light of the emerging sun swallows the darkness and the Hamd ascends.

 *Without the rose-coloured glasses

"Seclusion from human society is not desirable. One should mix with people and face their blows and buffets," said Hazrat Nizamuddin Awliya. As this golden Chishti thread pulls me closer I find myself unavoidably in the company of people. And after that initial euphoria of living in "the East" has somewhat subsided I understand just what blows and buffetings one is required to face. When compared to Pakistan, life in the seclusion of an Australian bushland retreat had been like living in the protection of a soft cottonwool house. But the lessons learned during the isolation of Australia really must be acted upon in Pakistan. Sufism is a living reality, to be lived not simply theorized. In the words of Hazrat Inayat Khan, “It is easier to gain mastery in the wilderness, away from all temptations, but the mastery you gain in the world is of much more value; for the former is easily thrown down by a slight stroke, while the latter, achieved in the crowd, will last forever.”

 *A Chishti home.

Finding a safe home in Karachi was difficult because I was a foreigner, “gori” (white) lady. We had to be extremely careful. We searched and looked at many flats. Landlords did not want the responsibility. The hunt continued for many more months. I was getting desperate but I should have realized that there was a reason behind the delay. Chishtis! The Chishti Saints were directing us to the perfect, secluded home in a side alley in one of Karachi’s oldest colonies. A Chishti home, owned by a man who is a descendant of Shaykh Kaleemullah Chishti of Delhi, the saint whose Mazar we had entered through the tiny narrow “slot”. The owner’s wife comes from a family who are descendants of Hazrat Qutbuddin Bakhtiyar Kaki, the saint who had passed away in the ecstasy of qawwali! A gentle, loving, humble family of Chishti lovers with sun-like affection, river-like generosity and humility like the earth.

12. “You are a Chishti!”

The yellow and red woollen threads from the Mazar of Khwaja Mu’innuddin Chishti in Ajmer Sharif symbolize the humility and true love that form the heart of the Chishti Teaching. In his final sermon to his followers Khwaja Mu’innuddin Chishti expressed the very essence of Sufism.

*Love all and hate none.
Mere talk of peace will avail you naught.
Mere talk of Allāh and religion will not take you far.
Bring out all the latent powers of your being and reveal the full magnificence of your immortal self.
Be surcharged with peace and joy,
and scatter them wherever you are and wherever you go.
Be a blazing fire of truth.
Be a beautiful blossom of love and be a soothing balm of peace.
With your spiritual light dispel the darkness of ignorance;
Dissolve the clouds of discord and war and spread goodwill, peace and harmony among the people.
Never seek any help, charity or favours from anybody except Allāh.
Never go to the courts of kings, but never refuse to bless and help the needy and the poor, the widow and the orphan, if they come to your door.
This is your mission, to serve the people...
Carry it out dutifully and courageously, so that I, as your Pir-O-Murshid, may not be ashamed of any shortcomings on your part before the Almighty Allāh and our holy predecessors in the Silsila on the Day of Judgment.*

It was the Urs Celebrations of Hazrat Nizamuddin Awliya in July 2002. The ceremonies and celebrations were at the khanqah of Soofie Saheb in Pietermaritzburg a small town inland from Durban in South Africa. I was the specially invited guest of Shah Irshad Soofie, great grandson of Soofie Saheb, khalifa in both Chishti-Nizami-Habibi and Sabiriyya Silsilas. It was Irshad who had met me three months earlier at the doors of Baba Farid’s Darbar in Pakpattan Sharif.

On this cold July night the courtyard and mosque and adjoining buildings of the khanqah were crowded with thousands of devotees and lovers of the Sufi Saints. I had no idea there were so many intoxicated lovers in faraway South Africa! Shy at having so much attention focused on me, yet incredibly humbled by such an honour, I sat with other members of the Soofie family watching the sandal ceremony. A large bearded man with the most vibrant and passionate voice sang Na’ats and Manqabats as the procession slowly advanced across the courtyard to hoist the Chishti-Nizami-Habibi Silsila's red and pale yellow flag high atop the flagpole. This stirring ceremony, designed to pay homage to a Saint, a wali, during his Urs, reflects the immense love that people have for him and the exalted degree of respect in which he is held. It is a symbolical reminder of the bliss that is enjoyed by a beloved slave of Allāh. Slowly the flag was raised, unfurling and fluttering as it reached the top, in honour of Mehboob Ilahi, Hazrat Nizamuddin Awliya.

As the heartmelting songs floated through the chilly night air, men and women wept silently in the midst of an all-enveloping fragrance of burning sandalwood. Just as the bark of the sandal tree is crushed to release its fragrance, so too is the Saint, the wali, annihilated in his love of the Beloved. His spiritual fragrance then reaches far and wide, permeating the atmosphere and the hearts of his devotees. Burning sandal and the soft flapping of the flag. Shah Irshad began to speak. One of the gentlest and most mellow voices I have ever heard. Filled to overflowing with love of the Sufi Saints. Just listening to Irshad speak surely could kindle the dormant flame of 'ishq in the breasts of potential lovers! Irshad was talking about me. I sat nervously, waiting. I was being presented with a gift. A beautiful creamy-white shawl was placed over my shoulders by one of the elders, a woman of the Soofi family. Then I heard unbelievable words, words so profound that it will take me years to begin to understand even a fragment of their meaning. Shah Irshad was welcoming me, "my sister from Pakistan, Amatullah Armstrong CHISHTI!"

"Chishti!" The great grandson of Soofie Saheb was bestowing upon me and blessing me with the name Chishti, here at the Urs Celebrations of Hazrat Nizamuddin Awliya. The thread, a Chishti thread! "You are a Chishti!"

After these emotional moments I was ushered inside a building to wait with family and other guests in a lounge room beside which was a small, intimate and dimly lit chamber – a sanctified room where a Sacred Treasure was guarded. Within this small chamber was a Hair from the beard of the Holy Prophet Muhammad. May Allāh Shower him with Blessings and Peace. A Treasure so exalted, so overflowing with blessings and mystical light, altogether bewildering and beyond comprehension! This Hair had been handed down through the Soofie family, Soofie Saheb being a descendant of Hazrat Abu Bakr Siddiq. And now the Blessed Hair had grown over fifty shoots. On this luminous night the Blessed Hair was ceremonially bathed in rose water, every drop of which was gathered then sipped by we fortunate ones, for inner purification and blessing.

It was a night of immense meaning, to be honoured with the name Chishti and to drink this Sacred Water. And I am only just now beginning to realize the profundity of those two "miraculous" events in my life.

During his lifetime the Holy Prophet Muhammad gave hair from his beard and head to his Companions who kept them as a source of blessing. Since that time the Blessed Hair has been passed down through families and Sufi Silsilas. Countless people throughout the world have these Treasures in their possession. On special occasions, such as the month of the Prophet's birth, Rabi al-Awwal, these Sacred Treasures are displayed.

Rosewater is poured over the Blessed Hair supposedly as a shower for the Hair, but in reality it is the rosewater itself that becomes purified through contact with the Sacred Treasure. Drinking this rosewater is an act of love of the Holy Prophet Muhammad. And truly blessed is the one who drinks it! There are miraculous qualities in each Blessed Hair. The Hair casts no shadow. The Hair grows longer each year. A cloud will appear above the Hair if it is taken out into the sunlight. Every year a new shoot will appear on the Hair. Shah Waliullah of India confirmed that in a dream his father Shah Abdur Rahim saw the Holy Prophet giving him two pieces of his hair. When he awoke he found these two pieces of hair and the four miraculous qualities were present. Whenever blessings on the Prophet were recited the entangled pieces of hair would stand upright. After the recitation they would once again become entangled.

Taking bai'at from a Sufi Shaykh, a Pir-O-Murshid, is one of the most important and serious steps that one can take in life. It is not to be taken lightly so great are the implications of the bai'at. The murid's pledging allegiance to the Murshid carries immense responsibilities for both Murshid and murid. The murid is the one who wants Knowledge or Unconditional Love of Allāh and the Murshid is the guide who will show him the Way to attain it. Having been connected to my first Tariqa for many years I was well aware of the high degree of steadfastness and devotion that a murid is required to have and maintain. So, the step to renew my bai'at with another Pir-O-Murshid was one that I carefully and cautiously considered for a long time. I dared not enter into a spiritual bond without total certainty. Within my heart I already knew that Mehmood's Pir-O-Murshid, Baba 'Abdul Razzaq Raza Shakoori was my Pir-O-Murshid too, though I had not yet taken bai'at from him. My head and heart had to come together in utter agreement, without any doubts or misgivings. However, in South Africa when several people asked, "Who is your Murshid?" I unhesitatingly answered that it was Babaji.

Whilst in Durban I had the honour of spending a few private hours with Shah Irshad Soofie's Pir-O-Murshid, Hazrat Ghulam Muhayyuddin Qazi Habibi. This "man of light" had been present at Durban Airport on the day of my arrival and he had also been present at the Urs Celebrations in Pietermaritzburg and at one of my "talks" he had been present in the adjoining room, listening. On this day when we were to spend those vitally important hours together, we met at the Mazar of Soofie Saheb, where Hazrat Saheb had been sitting deep in meditation. He took me to another Mazar for du'as and salaams and then to his apartment in the city where we had tea with his family. We then sat in his astana, the small room of devotion and prayer.

Hazrat Saheb pulled aside a veil on the wall to reveal a photograph of a radiant human being, his own Pir-O-Murshid. I had seen this photo before at Shah Irshad's home. It was the luminous face of Hazrat Shah Ibrahim Soofie the wali whose Mazar is in Ajmer Sharif, the Saint who dared not enter Khwaja Saheb's Mazar because of the aweinspiring presence of spiritual beings from the Unseen Realm.

Guarded and protected in a curtained and veiled cabinet in the corner of Hazrat Saheb's astana was a Blessed Hair of the Holy Prophet. We were surrounded by and immersed in so much barakah, spiritual energy. Hazrat Saheb spoke gently and reassuringly to me. Being a man of kashf, unveiling, and basirah, insight, he knew my situation and the caution with which I was approaching my renewed bai'at. Quickly he dispelled my worries when, upon my mention of the name Baba 'Abdul Razzaq Raza Shakoori, he indicated that Babaji was indeed my Pir-O-Murshid.

In Johannesburg I was again privileged to sit privately with Shaykh Chopdat of the Sultan Bahu Sufi Centre, where I was scheduled to talk with the ladies. The Shaykh is a khalifa in the Sarwari-Qadiri Silsila. The story behind the Sultan Bahu Mosque, Sufi Centre and Orphanage is truly wonderful but it is beyond the scope of this present book. It deserves a study in itself, which hopefully one of the Shaykh's murids will undertake. Shaykh Chopdat, a small and humble faqir, appeared quite incongruous sitting amidst the carpets and sofas of the luxurious Sufi Centre. Dressed in simple qamis shalwar with a prayer cap atop his long hair the Shaykh and I discussed many things. And when I mentioned Baba 'Abdul Razzaq Raza Shakoori he too indicated that Babaji was my Pir-O-Murshid.

Yet, even after all these signs, I still needed a further indication, confirmation. I was indeed very cautious. Back in Karachi I asked a friend, a German Muslim man, to please take me to the Mazar of his Chishti Pir-O-Murshid in Sakhi Hasan Cemetery. My German friend had embraced Islam back in the 1970's and become the murid of Hazrat Shahidullah Faridi, the English Chishti Shaykh. It was another of Hazrat Shahidullah's murids who, four years earlier, had given me that yellow and red sacred thread on my initial visit to Pakistan, the man who had said, "You are a Chishti!"

As I sat in contemplation at the Mazar of Hazrat Shahidullah Faridi I received a total verification of the correctness of my resolve to take bai'at. Babaji's face appeared before me, completely unbidden. I did not need any more signs or indications. All I had to do was wait till the "call" came from Babaji!

Early one Sunday morning in August I catch a rickshaw to Babaji's astana. Not his tiny astana of days gone by. The new astana situated only a few hundred metres from the former one is spacious and sunny. A large tree grows in the middle of the courtyard. The perfect setting for qawwali mehfiles! There are many rooms, for sisters to gather and brothers to talk and rest, a kitchen and washrooms. And at one end of the courtyard is a long room with a high ceiling. This is Babaji's room. The familiar photos cover the walls with chadars enclosed in glass cabinets. Green walls and furnishings, a tranquil and truly joyous atmosphere pervades this new astana just as it did the old! And for all its spaciousness it still is the simple and humble astana of a true faqir.

Babaji has numerous murids, some extremely wealthy and many exceedingly poor, all devoted to his service. Throughout the years the wealthy murids have again and again offered their large homes to Babaji who, being a faqir and utterly detached from the things of this world, has always declined. Yet, it was the murids who purchased this new astana, renovating and decorating it through their overflowing love of their Pir-O-Murshid.

Babaji is lying on a charpoy in the middle of the courtyard when I enter the new courtyard. I give salaams to some brothers who indicate that it is in order for me to go directly to Babaji. Such caution must be observed and permission granted from older murids because, as yet, I am not Babaji's murid.

Outside in the laneways it is hot and sticky. Here, inside the astana the sun's rays filter gently through the lush growth of the solitary tree, bathing the courtyard in a delicate light. Such a pleasant setting, gentle on the eyes! But... Babaji is now blind! Months earlier after an operation to remove cataracts he lost his outer sight. Unable to see his new astana yet seeing with his inner eye, the eye of the heart, the basira, seeing what none of us can see!

I kiss Babaji's extended right hand, lean close to his ear and softly whisper the words asking to take bai'at from him. He holds my hand tightly and replies,

“Where is Mehmood? When is he coming?”

“Next week Babaji! Should Mehmood be with me? Do you want Mehmood to be here for my bai'at?”

“Yes! Don't worry about anything. Wait till Mehmood comes.”

It is the 19th of September 2002. It is Thursday, a special day. The 11th of Rajab, a special date in a special month, the month of Khwaja Saheb's Urs. Five years have passed since I first saw Baba 'Abdul Razzaq Raza Shakoori Malangi Chishti on a video recording as I sat in a tenth floor apartment in the Australian city of Brisbane. With a degree of urgency Mehmood takes me to Babaji. When the inner call comes nothing can deter one from going, nothing can keep one away!

A few sisters sit in their room writing tawiz and saying zikr on their prayer beads whilst brothers chat quietly on a mat in the shaded courtyard. Babaji beckons me to sit with him on the charpoy. Mehmood is nearby as Babaji had wished. The moment for my bai'at has arrived!

“You know what is Tasawwur?”

“Yes Babaji!”

“You must practice Tasawwur. You must keep my face always in your heart!”

“Babaji! You have been in my heart for over five years!”

And Babaji smiles radiantly as he clasps my hand even more tightly in his. Perhaps this is the reason why Gharib Nawaz, Khwaja Mu'inuddin Chishti didn't invite us to his Urs in Ajmer Sharif in this year of 2002!

*

The thread, a Chishti thread, running through my life, pulling me from Australia to Pakistan across the Ocean of 'ishq and into the hearts of the Chishtis! Each and every murid in each and every Sufi Silsila all over the world will have his or her unique story about the unfolding of the spiritual connection to the Silsila. The Sufi Path is a living reality, the unfolding continuous.

We were returning to Karachi after the Urs Celebrations of Qazi Baba in Sukkur. Babaji and about eighty of his murids took over one entire carriage of the train. A blessed ziyarat it had been, to one of Babaji's own Pir-O-Murshids.

Usually I am so thoroughly disenchanted on the return train journey to Karachi. Coming back from the fervour of an Urs in Pakpattan Sharif, or from India after the inexpressible joy of Khwaja Saheb's Darbar in Ajmer Sharif and the intimate spiritual connection at the Mazar of Hazrat Nizamuddin Awliya in Delhi. Always my spirits are low as the train descends further and further south into Sindh and then to Karachi, back to the familiar. But this train journey from Sukkur after the Urs of Qazi Baba is quite different. Instead of the despondency of former returns I now experience a subtle elation and sense of inner joy.

Babaji's compartment has been prepared at one end of the carriage. Voluminous soft bedding swathed in green velvet and bulbous cushions similarly adorned are spread over hard Pakistan Railways seats rendering the dismal space into a place of delightful intimacy and strange appeal.

One hour into the journey, after our meal and just as Mehmood has spread a cloth on the floor for a night of much-needed sleep Babaji summons him to his presence. The harmonium is lifted from the baggage rack. Ahh! There is to be a mehfal, a very private, very exclusive and extremely important mehfal – on the train as we travel south. Quickly I take my camera from my bag.

The glorious sound of the voice calls me, beckons me, attracts and intoxicates me! I cannot stay away. These are treasured moments, moments to be captured! Impossible to capture but at least these moments can be recorded and placed in my book that someone may read someday or perhaps no one!

And so it was. There on a train travelling at night through interior Sindh, there I witnessed, in all its heart-melting beauty, the transmission of divine inspiration from the heart of Baba 'Abdul Razzaq Raza Shakoori Chishti to the heart of his murid and khalifa, the dervish qawwal Mehmood "Majnun" Ghaznavi Sabri.

Babaji the Master, his outer eyes now blind but his inner eye, his basira, wide-open and seeing the unspeakably beautiful visions of the Unseen Real. Translating his inner visions into musical notes of subtle poignancy he transfers the inspirational melodies to Mehmood's heart and ears. Now it is Babaji who sings and Mehmood who listens. Their heads touching, their hearts connected. Babaji holds Mehmood's hand in his own. Babaji passes the hints, the subtle influences and allusions to Mehmood who then finds the perfect raga within his own self. Babaji's smile of utter joy illuminates the entire carriage and all of our hearts! Never have I seen Babaji more beautiful!

Then with three strong hard punches in the middle of Mehmood's back Babaji seals the transmission. Babaji is pleased, so pleased. Pure satisfaction and delight emanate from him as he leans back on the green cushions. Babaji is pleased with his qawwal khalifa. How blessed is Mehmood! And how blessed Amatullah to be there!

Perhaps this was the weaving of that Chishti thread into the amazing multi-coloured tapestry of my attraction and connection to the great Chishti Saints of the Subcontinent and to their lovers. I had come to Pakistan ostensibly to investigate and analyse the descent of divine inspiration into the heart of the Sufi qawwal Haji Ghulam Farid Sabri. But here I was witnessing the transmission and directly experiencing the profound beauty and effect of such inspiration upon his youngest brother! And this I did during those precious hours on a train travelling south in the darkness of a Pakistani night.

The descent of divine inspiration was woven into the voice of Mehmood Ghaznavi Sabri which was woven through and through with the delicate yet unbreakable golden threads of the Chishti Silsila and the Saints' messages of love to humanity.

2004. As I sat facing the audience of expectant listeners I realized that the time had come when this book must be completed. We were gathered in a stunningly beautiful setting, the haveli called Barood Khana, deep inside the labyrinthine alleyways of the old city of Lahore. We had gathered together to experience the qawwali of the Sabri Brothers. It was a special occasion, a blessed occasion because it was Haji Maqbool Ahmed Sabri's first concert after his heart surgery. A miraculous recovery in only three months! And here I was, the woman from Australia, introducing Pakistan's most dearly loved qawwals to an audience of Pakistanis! This book had to be completed so that the story could be told of how I followed a dream and reached the Chishtis and ... Sabri.

*Having said so much I realize,
there's really nothing to say!
Nothing to write!
Just the music
And the voice,
And – the drowning!*
